NEARLY EVERY GIRL

PRETTY AND ATTRACTIVE

PRETTY AND ATTRACTIVE

Some Wholesome Truths That

Every Girl Should Think

About.

Probably you know just such a girl. Perhaps she is sixteen—good : look at, and pretty—quite interesting because she reflects the graces and charm the give promise of happiness to herself and others. But she is not strong. The color in her cheeks, once so rosy, has faded away—her eyes are listless—the buoyancy of spirit and vigor she once possessed are sadly lacking. Parents, friends, this girl needs Ferrozone—needs it they her blood may be reneaded.

The first half of this week Loew' Theatre offers a nicely-diversified pro gram of reasonably good pictures and better-than-usual vaudeville. Monday's better-than-usual vaudeville, Monday's attendance crowds seemed especially pleased with the vaudeville and applauded generously. Col. Diamond and his granddaughter offer a dance and lecture novelty, "Youth and Old Age." Col. Diamond is $3, and tells why at that age he can dance as gracefully as a boy of forty. His advice is wholesome and is simply presented, quite within the comprehension of the average vaudeville audience. His granddaughter is charming and a graceful danseuse.

Bonner and Power, in one of those
"Where are you going, pretty maid?"
acts, of which the vaudeville woods
seem so full, are really entertaining.
In this case the pretty maid is a young woman with the latest ideas on eugenics, and doubtless the act has a certain element of educational value.
The wit is brighter and the humor less offensive than one usually finds in acts of this easily-constructed type.
Grew and Pates offer still another educational act, a nicely-ornamented family jar with a "club husband" and a "club wife" as principals. It's good propaganda for the Ellen Key antifeminist school, which holds with Nietzsche that woman's place is in the home. Novelty and real entertainment are incorporated.
The three acts by some old coincidence appearing in the same bill, suggests the question whether educational vaudeville might not find a favorable reception were it afforded more extensively. The difference between "educational" and "propaganda" should be kept in mind, however. Soaphoxers and suffragists may have their proper place in society as well as clubmen, the happy ending of the Grew and Pates act with Anti-Feminism triumphant, notwithstanding. Some gentle kidding for the eugenists is handed out in the Bonner and Power act, and the eugenists at times deserve even resugher treatment. Col. Diamond's health culture lecture is, of course, given in a serious vein.

"The Misfit Wife." with Alice Lake in the leading role, is one of those preposterous photoplays picturing the snobbery of the time-honored old New York families, when the wayward son marries a manicurist in a western mining town. Maybe such snobbery can actually be found in New York, but the ceaseless filming of it gets a bit tedious to the picturescers out in the democratic hinterland. An old Virgina family would have been pictured with better breeding and decent manners. Surely such caricature isn't fair to all the old New York families. Besides it isn't fair to manicurists, lots of whom use very decent English. The use or misuse of "Ain't" doesn't divide society as accurately as the photoplay writers seem to think.

AT THE PATRICIA.

With two bloods flowing through the same veins, struggling always in terrific battles for supremacy, with a soul torn by longings for the culture of the Northland, but unable to surmount a barrier created by a taint of the blood of the South Sea Islander, a basis for an exceedingly strong story has been found. This story is the theme around which an unusual but beautiful picture. "The Adorable Savage," which is showing at the Patricia Theatre, the first half of this week, has been built. It is the tale of the South Sea Islands, of a girl educated in America, with but a faint memory of early scenes in the Fiji Islands, where she was born, as the only recollections of her childhood. After years of believing she was a white woman, she discovers that her mother was a native of the South Seas, a fact which revolutionizes her whole life. Apalled by the thought that mixed blood flowed in her veins she tried to become a savage by throwing off her role of refinement.

Edith Roberts played the leading role of Marmara, Her portrayal of the claracter, which was singularly difficut, was delightful. She is supported by an excellent cast, which gives a splendid finishing touch to the picture. With two bloods flowing through the

Although no blame was attached to anyone for the death of Albert Miller. 697 Colborne street, who was crushed between the elevator and the third floor of J. Tanton & Son's storage, 143 York street, on Saturday afternoon, the jury at the inquest Monday night recommended that all elevator shafts be closed. This, it was contended, would give safety at each floor and between each floor to those operating them.

The inquest, which was conducted at the police station by Coroner Robert Ferguson. lasted but 45 minutes, as there was no way of finding the circumstances surrounding his death, no person having seen Mr. Miller until after death had occurred.

A New Hotel's Bearing on the City's Development

To many of those business and financial men who have backed their faith with their dollars the new hotel is the key that will open the way to development, limited only by the city's desire.

Such things as a new railway station for the city are almost certain to be hastened by London's own initiative and forward enterprise in creeting a hotel worthy of the city.

In a communication to Mr. George M. Reid, president of the Chamber of Commerce, who has given his time and energy to the new hotel, Mr. Charles Forrester, superintendent of the Grand Trunk London division, writes

"With reference to proposed new hotel at London, I consider that the hotel accommodation at the present time in London is too limited, and that a new hotel is badly required. In fact, that is what we need to put London on the map."

With London's new hotel under construction, it is not within the possibilities that railway and other improvements may long be withheld. Today more people go away from London through lack of accommodation than are able to stay and be accommodated.

London needs its new hotel for many reasons, but for none more than to prove our faith in the Forest City by our own works.
