La MARQUISE de FONTENOY The New Lord of St. Germain—Duke of Connaught May Spend Part of Each Year in England—Queen Mary's Attendants

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.) Lord St. Germain, through his father's death has just succeeded to the family honors as sixth earl, attained his majority last June, and has been serving since as a subaltern in the 2nd Dragoon Regiment, under the name of Lord Elliot, a title by which he has been known since the suicide of his elder brother, Edward, an officer of the Coldstream Guards, two years ago.

The letter blew his brains out with a sporting gun at his home at Port Elliot in Cornwall, on his return from a boat-tour where he had suffered from an attack of sunstroke, which apparently had effected his mind.

The Eliots, of whom Lord St. Germain is the chief, are an old Devonshire family, which since the fifteenth century has been settled in Cornwall, and has occupied its present home, Port Elliot, since the reformation. Henry VIII, in distributing the various confiscated monasteries and church lands, bestowed Port Elliot upon a certain John Champernowne, one of his particular cronies and boon companions.

The Duke of Connaught Canada's new governor-general, the Duke of Connaught, is neither a soldier nor a statesman, but a man of letters, a man of letters, a man of letters.

A Singer and His Right to Title In reply to letters received from Chicago and St. Louis, asking for information as to the authenticity of the dual title of a young Italian actor, named Rosal Bonanno, now in St. Louis, who sang, in a recent performance in the Metropolitan Grand Opera in New York, I would mention that the very fact that he admits that his nobiliary dignities come to him through his mother's family would be sufficient to class them under the head of doubtful titles.

Frank Motta, official Italian interpreter, a prosperous banker and merchant of Toronto who has intimated to the Italian government that there are 300 Italians in Toronto alone and thousands more in other parts of Canada who are ready to return at once and fight under the Italian colors against Turkey.

A HYMN FOR THE HARVEST

Now we raise our grateful voices giving thanks to God above, While replenished earth rejoices in the Father's bounteous love; Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Glory be to God above.

Precious seed borne forth with weeping, dying lonely in the earth, Into life and fruitage leaping conquers death by second birth; Joyous reaping, joyous reaping— Golden sheaves of richest worth.

Heed my soul this Heavenly preaching, selfish gold is worthless dross, Learn what flowers and fruits are teaching, Life from Death and gain from loss; Love ne'er faileth, Love ne'er faileth, Learn to glory in the Cross! —F. L. H. Sims.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"YES, I got him to take it down. He made quite a fuss about it, but did it finally. You can just believe that I'm not going to have any other woman's picture in my husband's room."

The speaker, who is a pretty little newlywed, preened herself triumphantly. She had had her way. She was happy. I wonder how long it will be before the tendency she showed in that incident will bring thunder clouds scudding into the cloudless sky of her bridal existence.

The picture she "got him to take down" was a little photograph of a boyhood sweetheart. Six years before he even met the woman who is now his wife, that sweetheart was married. But, in memory of his happy childhood, he has always kept that little picture of his first love. It surely means no more to him as much to him as the "D" he won at college and still wears so proudly on his sweater, or the baseball bat which he still cherishes because it was with it that he helped to win that great game of sixteen years ago.

Poor, foolish, little Mrs. Newlywed. She is one of those unfortunate women—unfortunate both for themselves and their husbands—whose ideal of marriage is that a wife should be not only the most beloved being on earth to her husband but the only person whom he cares anything about.

She is jealous of his dog, his mother, his men friends, his club, his business, his golf, his childhood, and even of his possible widowhood. She is, above all, most unwilling that he should ever admire any quality, no matter how fine, in any other woman than herself.

She may find unpopularity in failure. She is just as apt to find it in success. I know a woman whose husband is a great enthusiast on lawn tennis. One of his wife's friends is also very fond of this sport. When she comes to the house, or whenever they meet, her elsewhere, the husband immediately devotes himself to her and talks of tennis. Sometimes he takes her to tournaments, and often they share just one interest with another woman.

His wife is not strong enough to play tennis and is not really interested in the game, although for her husband's sake, she has learned to talk intelligently about it. People sometimes wonder if she is not jealous of the woman who can meet him on this ground. Once, someone was foolish enough to carry this suspicion to her.

"My husband and I," she said, "have a hundred interests in common—our babies, our books, our music, our home and garden, and I let him know more than any other woman on earth. Am I to be jealous because he enjoys and admires another woman's tennisplaying? I think that would be simply churlish."

If there were more women with this attitude toward married life, I feel sure there would be that many more happy marriages to confute the cynic. Don't you?
