

On the Honour of a Pilot

Whereas many of my fellow airmen have needlessly lost their lives by low flying and other forms of dangerous flying; and

Whereas their deaths have caused even more pain and distress to their loved ones than if they had been killed in action against the enemy; and

Whereas I recognize that such deaths, pain and distress could have been avoided by forbearance and consideration for others on the part of the pilots concerned;

Now, therefore, I solemnly pledge upon my honour, that I shall faithfully adhere to the instructions and regulations governing my flying service in the Royal Canadian Air Force and that, above all,

I shall at all times resist any temptation to indulge in unnecessary low or other foolhardy flying.

This pledge I make to all whose happiness depends on my continued life, and the breach of it I shall consider a stain on my personal honour.
