

STRAWBERRIES A SUCCESS

Strawberries also are extensively grown, their higher value on the market compensating for the extra cultivation and more frequent planting out required for this queen of the berries.

For the small landowner, the retired business man or woman, the person incapable of heavy manual labor, no enterprise is so remunerative or so congenial as the raising of small fruits.

Rhubarb for shipping, tomatoes for canning and shipping, potatoes and the usual vegetables are profitably grown.

Sweet corn will both thrive and ripen for seed. Ensilage corn and many field varieties do well, and several varieties of grapes are grown out-doors.

ALL KINDS OF MONEY TO BE MADE IN HENS

Poultry-keeping as a profession, and apart from the customary barn-yard flock can be followed quite successfully in this district. Like every other occupation, it demands the full interest and decided fondness of the person undertaking the pursuit. Given this liking for feathered flocks and a reasonable intelligence, chickens, ducks and geese will yield a comfortable living for the owner.

Ducks and geese require only the meanest house for shelter. Chickens winter well in open-fronted houses, if they are wind-proof
