WHERE DOES THE "LIT" COME IN?

Looking back over the books of the Literary and Scientific Society, we find that in 1890, the Society donated $800 to the gymnasium project. For this large gift it was expected that in return the society should make its home in the gymnasium building, but as the years go by, the amount of room allowed to the Society is gradually lessening, and its comfort less and less consulted. The directorate who run the building have evidently forgotten that the Literary Society exas on Friday evening last strange sight might be seen of the members of that society which con-tributed $800 to the gymnasium having to crawl through a back window in order to attend their regular meeting in the Students' Union. We are aware that the caretaker was unavoidably absent, but fail to see why his substitute was not instructed to open the building as usual. Last year the Lit-erary Society had considerable difficulty in securing the use of the gym nasium for its annual functions. There should be no repetition of such a state of affairs this year. It would be better if the gymnasium authorities would consider more attentively the claims of a society to which the success of our university athletics is largely ow-

GLASGOW'S CELEBRATION.

When we read the account of Glasgow University's ninth jubilee, which means that the University is now four hundred and fifty years old, the sense our own Alma Mater's youth, and of the newness, comparatively speaking, of our whole country, is most forcibly impressed upon our minds. We cannot help but envy a little those men who pass their college course in a place ro-mantic with age and traditions, who feel that the corridors which they tread have echoed to the footseps of men famed in field and story. This to a great extent is lacking in our own University. It is so young that there has been no time for the accumulation of legend and romance in connection with it, while its graduates are of too recent date to have yet, except in a few notable instances, carved their name upon the scroll of fame.

Our attention is also called to the ceaseless progress of knowledge, and to the apparently endless path stretching out before it. Four hundred years ago men of Glasgow University probably thought that in philosophy and science they had climbed almost to the topmost round. They defended their doctrines with eloquence and logic, and were prepared to stake their reputation upon the truth of them. Now we know that they were wrong in almost every par ticular. But are we sure that we are right now ourselves? This m learn, that no man's knowledge is sure; that what is universally accepted now may be seen to be wrong a hundred years from now, and that, therefore we should not swell our chests with the pride of self-assurance, lest generations yet to come may read of us and laugh at our foolish confidence

SUCCESS OF GLEE CLUB AS-SURED.

The first practice of the Glee Club was held on Friday last, the 25th inst. The large number of singers who turned out was most gratifying to those who have the success of the club at heart. A considerable number of last year's members was present, as well as a most encouraging lot of new material. Altogether over thirty-five men were as sembled under Mr. Cringan's baton for the first time. It was indeed an agreeable surprise for the executive to see so much interest and enthusiasm at a first practice. Experience teaches that the interest grows with every additional practice under an efficient conductor and present indications augur well for practice will agree. The work at the first practice consisted principally in exercises for blending and arranging the voices. The volume and excellence of the tone secured under Mr. Cringan's carful direction was quite re markable in a chorus which had never sung together before. Before next Friday most of the music for this season will have been decided upon, and the practices will be interesting as well as instructive. There is every prospect that a good tour will be arranged for some time near Christmas, and to judge by present prospects, there will be keen competition for places in the chorus on the tour. this reason all who are desirous of going on the tour are advised to attend every practice. There is no need for a man to be a trained singer. The principles of chorus singing are taught at the practices, and though previous experience is an advantage, it is by no means a necessity.
