THE CATHOLIC RECORD.

HEART AND SOUL. EY HENRIETTA DANA SKINNER, AUTHOR OF

CHAPTER XIX.

I remember wondering what it would feel like to be in the free open air again, in no man's power, and well out of this disagreeable scrape. It was all so clear to me now that we seemed blind not to have known from the first the true state of affairs. I had no experionce with the insane, but it ap-peared to me best to avoid a struggle or a trial of physical strength, and to sympathize with his illusions or graduly divert his mind from them, as one would that of a child. Fortunately he seemed at the moment to have no feeling of personal antipathy for me, but I could not tell how long this would last. He still heid my wrists uncomfortably tight, and I dared not complain. I expressed surprise and interest in what he told me, but he did not stop to listen.

There was a carriage in waiting at "There was a carriage in waiting to the end of the block when I came in. The door was half open, and there was no one inside. It is waiting for me !" he shouted. "For me ! They want to take me off ! They believe what she says, but they are all de-ceived." Suddenly his voice dropped to a whisper, and he began to push me towards the window. "See there! The carriage has moved! It has the opposite side of the at does that mean ?" crossed to the street. What doe

I did not resist him, but, though I did not wish to appear afraid of him, yet I could hardly be said to relish the idea of standing at a fifth-story window with a lunatic who had tight hold of me and might take it into his head at any mo ent to pitch me out into the street be low. "Is it another signal ?" I suggested, mysteriously. " Do they know we are together here ?" He looked troubled, and to my im mense relief dropped my hands and stepped back a pace or two. "They must not see me," he said, over and until Mr. Arthur could be consulted must not see me," he said, over and over again. "I have written to her father and told him the true state of the case," he muttered, after a pause. Perhaps he has sent the carriage to take her to the asylum."

knows she is crazy, for I have told him all about it. We will drive he there w before her spies know what we ar Then he paused and looked spiciously. "I am afraid of doing. around suspiciously. "I am afraid of them," he said, trembling. "Suppose the conchman should be a spy, and should take me off instead of her would consent to anything so simple and obvious, but in his distorted frame of mind he did not see what was plainly of mind he did not see what was plainly my motive. He caught at the idea with a sigh of relief, and began to fumble in his pocket for the key. "They will not know you," he said, eagerly. "You can do it. She will not suspect, and she will go with you With some difficulty he fitted the key to the lock and opened the door. I should have liked to spring through to outside freedom, but ught it wiser to hang back and feign indifference. "Go, go !" he said, hurriedly, pushing me through the aperture. " Pat her in the carriage and drive her off. I will hide here, so that they will not see sensation of fear, but when I passed out of the open door and heard him close it behind me and lock himself into the room, then I knew that I had been in deadly terror. I became so weak sud-dealy that I could hardiy pull myself together sufficiently to descend the stairs. At the landing on the bed as waiting.

I suggested, " and you stay here safely till I return."

sults

her in my hospital, and it will then be easier to persuade him to follow our plan of procedure." "My colleague and I are perfectly agreed, as he states, about the line of action to be pursued with regard to Mrs. Moir," said Dr. Netley, some-what ponderously. "Unfortunately we are not as well in accord as to the

Mrs. Moir, "said Dr. Netley, some what ponderously. "Unfortunately we are not as well in accord as to the method of procedure with the patient in question. We-" Lintermoted. it seems to me," I interrupted, " that the first thing is to secure Mrs. Moir's immediate safety. Her husband sult me in secret." Oh, Etienette! Poor little Etienette! has commissioned me to deliver her into Dr. Hude's hands. I do so. I To think that we knew not one word of what you were enduring ! "But did not Mr. Arthur notice his would now suggest that Dr. Hude drive her at once to a hotel where she will say, and there is no time to be lost.

The physicians hesitated. "We should not wish to take any

if Moir should appear on the scene beyond reach of danger, for Colonel nephew's condition ?" "It appears they are not on good Moir may change his mind at any moent and rush out to seek her.'

to court about it-it is whispered that we should not wish to take any step without due authorization from the family," said Dr. Netley, at last, slowly. "I would suggest that Mr. Fremont, as representing Dr. Chabert, he dared not, as there was something shady about the transaction. But of this I know nothing. For the present they are reconciled, and there has been compromise." "And you do not believe in Moir's Fremont, as representing Dr. Chabert, should take Mrs. Moir away." "I do not understand professional etiquette," I said, with scant courtesy, "the L do moderstand common Pro-"but I do understand common pro-priety. I know that I, who am absoluteultimate recovery?" "I believe that he may be relieved, may appear to be cured, but the trouble say so. My skin's tough as bark. If no relation to either, have no right to hide a man's wife away from him. I have done all that Mrs. Moir's father is liable to break out again in a more dangerous form. If it recurs he is likely to have a peculiar aversion to all and husband have commissioned me to do. But you can advise her professionhave had any connection in his mind with this first illness that will ally to leave him; she will do as you make it dangerous for them to ever put themselves in his power. He may be-The doctors stepped aside and par-leyed together. I was in an agony of impatience. I knew perfectly well that come sane and remain so to the end of his days, but again a very slight thing may upset him, and the result may be a tragedy power on earth could keep me from in-"Is he likely to live long in this conterfering between husband and wife. There would be murder before I would dition

"His general health is good. Barring see Etienette fall into his hands in his ccidents, he is likely to live beyond present mental condition. I prayed God that it would not come to that. niddle life But the doctors finished their consult-

I groaned in spirit. No one wishes to be a murderer, yet how often one would bless Providence if it saw fit to remove a fellow-mortal before his time ation, the upshot of which was that Dr. Hude could, consistently with etiquette, warn his patient's wife that she had best separate from him for a few days from this vale of tears! As the affair was now public property and no longer a family secret, I felt at liberty to tell my good Ohio friend the outline of the story, that Dr. Chabert's daughter was going back to her father's home, as her husband was temporarily · Will insane. "Sho! That's pretty hard lines!" he remarked. "I remember her in Washington as a bride—a pretty, black-eyed girl, with lots o' fine clothes, but eyed girl, with lots o' fine clothes, but a good girl and real spunky. She won my heart because she seemed so cut up about you, and didn't give herself no rest till she had everything prepared in the style for you when you come out prison. There warn't anything in whole hospital good enough for you. If I'd a' been her husband I'd a' been ealous. And she a bride, too!" And le laughed as if were a good joke. "S'spose you'll be takin' her home in a day or two?" he suggested. "No," I said, drearily. "She is going on to-night." "Not alone !" he exclaimed.

The

"I am afraid so.": He looked puzzled. "Where is she now ?" he asked. "I don't know," I replied, unwilling-"I don't know," I replied, unwilling-ly. "She is stopping at some hotel in the city; I haven't asked where." "What in thunder—" he began, then he stopped, muttered to himself a while, said "Sho!" several times with energy, then came and sat down near me in ellence matting my shouldar with his silence, patting my shoulder with his big hand from time to time. His delicacy and kindnesses were too much for me, and I put my head down I tried to on my arms and sobbed. I tried to speak, but he would not let me. "You needn't to say nothing," he said, soothingly. "You air a Fremont. You air a Fr said, soothingly. "You air a Fremont, and you couldn't do nothing that might lead any way that warn't the straightest and best. Yes, when a woman's unhappy, a man that's fond of her ain't so sure of himself as when she don't need no help or comfort, and he had better leave others to do for her at them cide to confine him. He will now think books, but does not allow her to see I needed a few weeks of absence and any triends unless he brings them to the house himself. Frequently those he brings are undesirable for her to meet. day, Etienette separated from a hus-band who had ill-treated her and made her unhappy, Etienette in need, as Major Haliburton had said, of help and comfort, this was a picture which I must turn my eyes from and harden my ous and apprenensive to do more than try to keep the peace at any sacrifice. Of general society she has long seen nothing. For many months past he has been threatening to send her to an asylum, and she was only able to con-afternoon, "I reckon I know you feel. You done right, but it's hard for a strong man with chivalry in his soul to leave a lone woman to travel that distance without an escort. She'll have to change cars once or twice and spend a night on the road, at Albany, maybe, terms. Arthur claimed a large suare in some sugar deal, and Moir would not give him a cent. Arthur would not go be free with me, Robert. I'm no lady's man, I'm not cultivated like what she's used ter, but I stand ready to go with her and she don't want for nothin'. Reckon I'm safe enough! I'm as old a man as her pa, and I'd b as careful of her as I would of my own little Dido. But if you think I wouldn't be good enough for her, just

I was overjoyed at his proposition, nd convinced him of my delight. It was an easy matter to get Mrs. Moir's address from Dr. Netley, and the good major called immediately to offer his services, which were accepted with such grace that he returned to our rooms in the best of spirits. "Did you have to refer to me all?" I asked, hesitatingly, as he crammed his belongings into his capac-ious carpet bag with ruthless hands. He turned half round and gave me

"Robert," he said, impressively, "there ain't a man livin' has a greater regard for truth, as truth, than Levi T. Haliburton. But you air detained in Washington, Robert. Not that she asked for ye. She didn't. But I had to make some explanation of how 1 come to offer as herescort. The Secre-tary of the Interior had important important tary of the interior had important business with you concernin' some canal, and it might detain you for days. You are a very talented engin-eer, Robert, and Uncle Sam's government thinks a heap of you." I nodded wearily. I must learn not to care how I appeared in Nita's eyes. But the malor headed But the major looked uneasy at my silence, and seemed to think it neces-sary to justify his action. "You see, the Good Book says, Robert, that if you talk with the tongue of an areal with the tongue of an angel and haven't charity yo'r religion ain't worth a damn; which I take to mean that you needn't be so allfired truthful as to hurt any one's feel-Now I didn't want that pretty creatur' to think that you nor no man else would ever neglect her, or fail to provide for her comfort. It always seem to me that what Ananias suffered provide for warn't so much for reason o' tellin' a lie as for cheatin' the poor. I believe take a bite o' somethin' with a cocktail that if he'd told the lie the other way, o's to give more'n his share, 'stead o they'll die from lack o' sustenance.' less, the Lord would 'a' winked at it, and Ananias would 'a' been alive to this day He did not seem to understand why I laughed so immoderately. "Glad to see you in such spirits," he said, gruff-ly. "Laugh away! I done the best for ly. "Laugh away! I done the best of you I know how, and I can't do no bet-ter than that. But I tell you what it is, Robert, I don't do nothin' for nothin'! If I go to Detroit for you, you air to go to Halifax with me."

This was not a bad idea. It fell in exactly with my wish for a prolonged absence from home, and so it about that I arranged to take a three weeks' vacation and started with him for Halifax. I went determined to enjoy myself, and to drive Etienette from my mind by filling it with all other nossible interests and occupations. Etienette must bear her own crosses winter, had its summer headquarters at My medicine chest contained three winter, had its summer headquarters at Halifax, the chief garrison town of British America. The presence of a large number of young officers with plenty of time on their hands for social remedies — quinine, paregoric, and calomel-and I tried them all in turn without success. He went from bad to worse, until I decided that we had betten enjoyment gave rise to continuous entertainments in the form of military send word without delay to Sir Everard and Lady Bourke of his inability to balls, dinners, picnics, high teas, lawn-parties, hops on board the men-of-war, small dances and sports of all kinds. attend the dinner on the morrow, that they might secure a guest in his place When I returned from despatching the note, I found him sitting up looking a My grandf ther had procured for me from some of the dignitaries in Upper Canada letters of introduction to the Governor of Nova Scotia and many little shamefaced. "I feel some better, sonny," he said. apologetically. "I guess yo'r remedie air beginnin' to take a hold." aligonian officials, and I also carried letters from Washington officials to the colonel of the Royal Eugineers and to I am very glad," I said mischiev. ly, "for I couldn't hire any one to ously, two of the leading civil engineers of Nova Scotia. Armed with these, I was take that note way out to the North-west Arm, and you'll have to go, after Nova Scotia. Armed with these, I was received with characteristic hospital-ity, was made the guest of the best clubs, and was soon almost overwhelmed with invitations and calls. I was there to enjoy myself, and I entered into the spirit of the gravet with all the zost all. He turned so pale and looked at me in such consternation that I had'nt the heart to tease him long, and after I had nearly frightened him back to bed,] admitted that the note was well on the spirit of the gayety with all the zest way to its destination, and he breathed which generous strains of French and Irish blood brought to the fore.

NOVEMBER 1, 1902.

Miss Sophy

high-bred, aristocratic

My Miss Bourke I discovered to ow long she had been back from Eng-freely again. Captain Larpent, of the Royal Engin-I did not wish to force myself upon Major Haliburton's friends, or to diseers, drove me out in his trap to the Bourke residence on the Northwest turb the privacy of a family reunion, and had not accompanied him in his first visits to Sir Everard's residence Arm, a lovely sheet of water, an inlet of Halifax Bay, sorrounded by the coun-try-houses of wealthy Haligonians, After we had passed through the lodge in the suburbs, but at the end of a few days I received a formal invitation to gates and were driving up the shady approach, I noticed a pretty cottage there. I went to show my note to the major and found him in a regular buried under the trees, which he told me was occupied by Miss Sophy panie. "Robert," he said, in an awe-stricken whisper, "I wish you to accept. I'm proud of you and I wish them to know Bourke. "She is an independent, energetic But 1-er, I don't feel well. I'm little old maiden lady, and lives with a niece that she has adopted. ailin' a little, an' I don't think a din-ner'd agree with me. I, er-the truth have not been returned from home." "Home," of course meant Eugland, where all good Nova Sectians who could is, Robert, I never been to a dinner party in all my life, and there's goin to be twenty at table, Dido tells me, young and old, twenty low-neck and afford it sent their sons and daughter to be educated. After entering the swallow-tails, and they air goin' to hunt drawing-room and paying my respects to Sir Everard and Lady Bourke, I was in couples, ten pair men and women, and dinner to begin at half-past seven. to Sir Everard and Lady Bourke, I was introduced in rapid succession to "Miss Bourke," "Miss Sophy Bourke," "Miss Bourke again," Miss Bourke again. This was puzzling, for the major had not told me there were so many granddaughters in the family. Miss Sophy Bourke I distinguished at once from his description—a lady about fifty wears of age, short, plump, and rosy, Of course, I been to political banquets, but there they ain't no women round, and I always give the nigger behind my keep me posted chair a dollar bill to keep me posted what knife and fork to use, and there's so much speechifyin' and hurrahin that nobody pays attention to yo'r table manners, anyhow. But I done pretty well here till now. I ain't done years of age, short, plump, and rosy, but the three ladies of the younger generation were strikingly alike. They were of the Celtie order of coloring, with black hair, blue eyes, very (arc brows and lashes, and red and white complexions. The Halifax girls, as a Oneida no discredit so far as I know, and I don't want to begin now. The New York tailor give me the right clothes, and you tell me when to put them on; I've been mighty careful my grammar, an' I've took no meal at the big house but tea, which is plain rule, were small and lively, three Miss Bourkes were tall and stately, with broad shoulders, small sailin', only they take it in the draw ing-room, and the cups air tarnation small. It ain't quite hearty enough for waists and slender hips, long ne hapely heads. Their manners were me—just buttered toast and muffins and cake. I like preserve and a bit o' han correct and dignified ; they were served of speech and sparing of smiles. Their noses were acquiline; they had arched nostrils and short upper lips. or chipped best with mine, and a couple o' baked potatoes, and a table to spread it out on. But seems they feed again later, and tea is just a kind o' stop-gap bytween 2 o'clock dinner and 7 o'clock and all the other adjuncts that go t make up the high-bred, aristocratic type of British beauty. I had hoped that I should be appointed to take Miss Haliburton into dinner, but I found myself assigned to one of the Miss Bourkes. I made as careful dinner. They have a cup o' tea and th. buttered toast when they get up in a study of her face as I dared, so that when they go to bed, so 'tain't likely

I might be able to distinguish her from her sisters, for the three girls dressed "Don't worry about the dinner-party, Uncle Lee," I said, reassuralike and seemed to be exactly of a ingly. He had once told me that was the name his niece called him by, not age. be not quite so tall as her sisters, to have fancying his Christian name of Levi, and blacker hair and eyelashes, eyebrows that nearly met, and a shy, startled-fawn expression in her Irich-blue eyes. I had adopted the appellation. "Give the dollar bill to me and I'll tell you The three maidens all looked proud what to do as well as any nigger.' and grave, but I believed mine formal

I persuaded him to send more timid than proud, shy and inex-perienced rather than serious, and it acceptance, but his spirits fell lower and lower as the time grew near. "It ain't no use," he complained put me on my mettle at once to try to "It ain't no use," "As soon as I begin to think about it I rouse her and draw her out. It proved to be a very difficult task. I did wish grow weak and shivery all over and my to treat her as a school-girl, ask her insides squirm all around in my stomach. I'm going to have an illness, Robert, I know I am. Such feelin's ain't natural. land, if she liked dancing and played croquet, if she preferred riding to driv I have rode through a hail o' bullets without turnin' a hair, but just the without turnin' a hair, but just the thought o' this here party makes me as sick as a cat.'

talk of Halifax, and as she introduced "Oh, you just need a little coaching," no subject of conversation I had unthat the Lord had sent her. I could not bear them for her or be disciplined in feel confidence in yourself you'll be all willingly to resort to the catechising

NOVEMBER 1

"I am very desire I said, at la in the conversation ably long, and she ha cousin,"

"Which cousin ?" "Oneida, Miss I plained. "Her unc ton, has been a frien boyhood. He tells Dido. She looked up at r ful, romantic, Irish-shy wildness, like th gazelle. A wave of the soft oval of her " I am Dido," she embarrassed tones.

TO BE CO

SOULS FROM PI VENT A

It was fair-day i Pyrenees. This f year only—on the f for the 8th of Ma September. It lass and is of great in towns, villages and the people flock bers.

A wealthy farm autumn fair his n had good luck in and, at the close af ket, had the satis away with him a exchange for his flo Not all were a jolly farmer. around the st the stalls market place had profitably as he, a nothing to sell, and to buy. The latter was men who had noth to watch their me bors. They beheld the ing in his luck, s horses, cows and s and bank-notes, an er's leathern walle fortune. These two men luck," as they cal manner of life. no friend of their talking over thei ments, they grew aged, gloomy and "Why should have so much rece the other. Their eyes met The f the same. their way too. through stream, through lonely paths, with river, whose bed current swift, the so did the farmer

' Let us lighte will never miss it " He is strong answered the oth

We are two. " But if he sti We are two ; y is cold ; your of hungry and nake ' But if he she for us ? No reply, only other's gloomy asked the other harm ?'

The question tering that ask long in coming weak and in an

I would not "But he is resist ?" reitera

There was n groan, and the The night was g The farmer ta

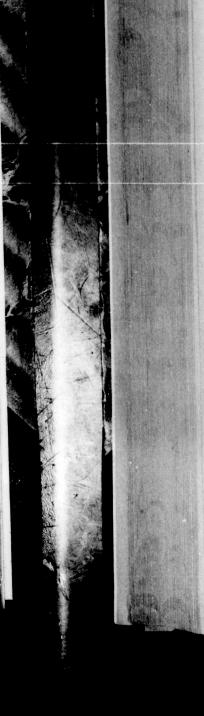

' He is with they are feast carries a light

Let his put the reply. darknes The ows gathered path became le "Let us wai and it could be determined how to treat I do not know if she had her purse with her," I said hesitatingly. " yoa kindly give her these bills? may need them. She left home abso-I sssented. " Dr. "Yes, yes," I sssented. "Dr. Hude's asylum." He started a little. "Dr. Hude lutely without preparation." Dr. Hude descended the steps, stood a moment talking to Etienette through the carriage window, then he gave instructions to the coachman, and the carriage drove off rapidly, I knew not After writing full particulars to Dr. Chabert, I took the train for Washington that evening. Major Haliburton had accompanied me to New York, as " I might take her to the doctor's, he intended to take the steamer from here to Halifax, Nova Scotia, where he was to visit some relations. was absurd to suppose that he teamer sailed duly the day after my departure, as I saw by the papers What was my surprise, then, on my re turn to New York, five days later, to be welcomed at the hotel door by my old friend. Not started yet !" I exclaimed. "They will not know you," "No, sonny," he said, cheerily. "I got down to the wharf, carpet-bag and all, and somehow I kinder recollected that you looked a little down in the mouth when you left for the national capital, and says I to myself, 'It'll do Robert good to see a friendly face when he returns.' The steamer goes every week, and I reckon my folks can live without me for awhile, for they have gone along for three years, and it hasn't busted their hearts yet. I have said that I had no conscious

I was much affected by this proof of his attachment. The major knew in a general way that Dr. Chabert was anxious about his daughter's health, I would but knew nothing further. have confided any trouble of my own to him without hesitation, but it seemed to me this was hardly my secret, and until something was definitely arranged I should not speak of it. With great delicacy he retrained from asking me any question. i hastened round to Dr.

room floor Etienette v looked up at me with appealing, inquiring eyes. I spoke low and rapidly : "Put on your bonnet as quick as you can and come with me. Your father sent me to rescue you, and I her father's home," he said. "Who goes with her?" I asked. have obtained your husband's consent to take you away. Don't lose a mo-

She obeyed unquestioningly, and we passed down the stairs together and out into the street. There was so much to be said, and so much to be explained, nected with her leaving her husband. yet we neither of us spoke. We crossed the street, and walked in sil-It is best for her sake, and no doubt she feels it so, for she did not refer to crossed the street, and walked in sli-ence half the length of the block to where the carriage stood. I opened its door and motioned her to get in. "Stay here while I go in to see Dr. you. It has been decided by Dr. Hude and Mr. Arthur that Colonel Moir shall travel for a year under the care of a you.

young physician and attended by his valet. They feel secure of good re-Inde. This is his carriage. He is onsulting with Dr. Netley within and Hude. expects me. Sit so that you can keep your eye on the door of your house. If Colonel Moir comes out, you must leave the carriage and run up the steps into the doctor's office. We shall probably call you to come in presently. We must all consult together and try to act for the best."

Dear, brave, good girl ! She did as she was told, without question or com-plaint. With a word to the astonished coachman, I left her and mounted the eps. The door was instantly opened me, and Dr. Hude was at the thressteps. hold to meet me. "She is all right," I exclaimed, breathlessly, " but he is as crazy as a the first year of their marriage." loon

The physician smiled blandly. " Of this coming on for years and has not course we know that, but we wished you to be satisfied of it. Mr. Frespoken to her family of it ?" nt, permit me to introduce you to my been very strange to her, giving her no money, not even allowing her to colleague, Dr. Netley."

I hardly had the patience to bow and no money, not even allowing her to touch the pin-money her father had settled on her. He was jealous and restless if she went anywhere alone, and finally forbade her to stir without him. She has been almost a prisoner ke hands. "He has commissioned me to drive her to your private hospital, and I have brought her over here. She is sitting in your carriage your carriage." The doctor laughed and rubbed his The doctor laughed and rubbed his when Colonel Moir chose to take her when Colonel Moir chose to take her hands. "You are an excellent man-ager, Mr. Fremont. This simplifies things immensely. Dr. Netley and I are agreed that she should leave him, as we believe her life to be more or less in danger while his illusions last; but she should stay in the city, as we may need her signature to papers if we de-"You are an excellent man-Fremont. This simplifies about with him. He too c a dislike to times I've never asked you no Hude's office to find what had been done. He was out of town and I had to wait an hour later until I could see should marry young if he can make up his mind to, even if it ain't his first love. But there is times when he tions, Dr. Netley. " Mrs. Moir is to leave to-night for and no doubt

" And you do not agree with them ?"

" It seems that from the first he has

I ventured. "I cannot !" he said, decidedly.

"I ain't never can't." He paused.

married," he added, slowly. I raised my head and drew a shade nearer to him. He tipped back his "She prefers to go alone. She do chair, crossed his legs and sat whirling his thumbs and staring steadily before

"I come of a better family 'n you'd like Oneida war. She's short and stout, but Oneida war tall and slender, and think. I know I don't talk like a man of education, but the education went to made you think of a lily every time you'd look at her. I expect her child is growin' up like her, though I ain't my elder brother. He war smart and wanted to be a doctor, and my father couldn't afford to send two to college, so he sent him. There war just one girl round our way that all of us boys war crazy to marry. Her mother's folks war from Halifax, Nova Scotia, and her crazy to father war a professor at the medical school. My brother always got the good things, and he got her." I moved a little nearer him and laid my hand on his arm. He swallowed hard for a moment and went on : consonants.

"I cannot !" he said, decidedly. "I speak to you as I should wish you to report to Dr. Chabert in my name. Mrs. Moir is a very brave and a very loyal young woman. As long as there "As I said, when a girl's happy you As I satu, when a girl's happy you can be kinder reconciled, and think perhaps you'll suit yo'rself elsewhera. Il she's unhappy it's none of yo'r busi-ness, and you oughtn't to think of it, is any hope of her husband's recovery it is doubtful if she will ever confide it is doubtful if she will ever confide even to her own father what she has suffered for the past four years. But when she consulted me about her hus-band's health, she felt obliged to tell but that's just the time you find you can't look anywheres else. Oneida warn't happy. He war a good man, me all that might serve as a key to his condition. Colonel Moir's mind seems but his patients war always comin' round and tellin' him their woes, and if have been slightly unhinged from she war sick they'd ask him out to tea. I'd left home then, and war doin' pion-eer work in the Backeye State, but I had seen come back from time to time, and I seen how it war. She war sick and lonely, and he war bein' petted up and havin' a good time and bein' told she didn't appreciate him. Then she died. ... Nigh twenty year ago ... In six months he married a young widder and raised a large family. Eleven. Oneida left one little girl, and her mother's folks took it to raise. They live in Nova Scotia. It's there I'm goin' now, to see my niece, Oneida Haliburton."

CHAPTER XX.

I've never asked you no ques-Robert, but I believe a man marry young if he can make up nd to, even if it ain't his float from hor hyperbull in no present danger got a little mixed up on the arms," I stammered, "but it's bound to be one or the other, not both at once."

Obviously he had lost confidence in me. "I might see which one she starts seen her for three years, but her folks me. "I might see which one s call her Dido, and they tell me Dido to hook on to," he suggested.

"You can leave everything to the lady," I said, eagerly. "She will fall war some kind of a queen in old times way back when folks war mostly pagan. Her great-uncle have a large family, into line when it is your turn to walk into the dining-room, and she will go into the dining-room, and she will go straight to the right seats at table. and live in a big place in the country. He's some pumpkins up there-got a handle to his name and half the alphabet They are trained to know these things. You must not sit down or begin to talk after it. You can't pronounce it, 'cause there ain't no vowel, nothin' but when you get to the table, for the host will ask a blessing first. Then about the middle of dinner, just after the

He fumbled with his pocket-book and produced a card, which he handed me with an affected air of difference, though game and before the sweets, the host will suddenly fall forward in his seat I knew well that he expected me to be with his head and arms on the table, his eyes rolling and a kind of apoplectic deeply impressed by it. Sir Everard Bourke, K. C. M. G., gurgle in his throat, and there will be

C. B.," I read out. "Yes, that's the way they spell it, "Yes, that's the way they pronounce he is only saying grace. The Haligon but do you know how they pronounce it, sonny?" he asked, anxiously. "Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George and Com-panion of the Order of the Bath," I replied, glibly. "I want to know!" he ejaculated. "It's easy readin' for you, 'cause you live right up there among them Canonly eat the soup and ice-cream. ucks and know their ways. Now I've had that card nigh three year, and couldn't never make head or tail out of it. I thought maybe it war French. The ladies write on their cards sometimes P. P. C. and R. S. V. P., and they say it means somethin' to them that know French. They air half French up in Canady, and I thought maybe they use the same system of spellin'." The gay season in Halifax was during man at the door who will ask our names and shout out ' Major Haliburton and here she was allowed to attend dinner-parties, which was not customary with unmarried young girls at "home," ies. The major told me something about his niece's position while we were on the big Canarder sailing to Liverpool via Halifax. and shout out 'Major Haliburton and Mr. Freemont!' The host and hostess will be standing near the door and will shake hands with us. Then we cross over to a corner and stand by ourselves unmarried young girls at "home," that she did not play the piano nor sing, but was fond of drawing and sketching in water-colors, that she could play croquet, that she had no could play croquet, that she had be saddle-horse of her own, and therefore seldom rode, and that her favorite sport was lobster-spearing. I was not familiar with this sport, though I had speared frogs and black bass in the speared frogs and lake country, and asked her to describe it to me, but she looked alarmed, and said, hesitatingly, that I should prob bably have a chance to try it for myself before I left Halifax. I began to fear that my handsome companion with the poetic brow and romantic eyes, the aristocratic profile and classic throat, was not merely shy There was no doubt that but dull. Etienette had spoiled me for other women — Etienette, so vivacious and full of fun; accomplished, well read, travelled ; witty, but always refined ; lively, yet always modest and self-respecting; gay, though full of deep and sincere feeling. I realized with a little pang at my heart that I must not bet my thoughts or heads to hear and I let my thoughts go back to her, and would have been well pleased co mld] in love at this have fallen desperately in love at this juncture. I was on the lookout for an object for my affections and it an-noyed me to find myself so fastidious. lans always return thanks in the middle of dinner, I suppose for fear they won't This young girl beside me was almost ideally handsome in face and figure, sensitively good and sweet in disposibe in condition to do it at the end." "But the forks, Robert," he groaned, "the forks and spoons? I suppose I could say I felt a little out o' sorts, and tion, if look and manner were to be be lieved, and no doubt carefully educated upon the best feminine models, yet I turned from her impatiently and set one o' the worst things comes at the enance, and that's the shell oysters. entertain me with a lot of society small-talk. On the other hand, how many I'd a heap sight rather eat 'em stewed ; then you can chase 'em round with a attractive and entertaining young spoon with some chance of getting 'em attractive and entertaining young women I had hardened my heart against because they lacked the high-bred charm and beauty of Miss Bourke. There was no doubt at all that I was an cornered. But these raw things are allfired slippery and they stick to the shell like leeches. I wrastled with 'em once and I know. I tell you it ain't no use, Robert; I ain't fit for these entertainunreasonable cad. I hated myself for it, and told myself soverely that the He took to his bed that afternoon. | ladies were probably far more critical

They took s erag that shut Darkness sett waited ; and t A footstep v hearts beat lo the rushing blood, was sur

" Come, are The voice o ling and the startled from t It was only flood of light showed them t of a goodly co His frien part of the wa we can interc Again all forth and fol time to tim through the them the farm erect and be irritated ther again-within dark, awful. to wait for th "He comes "Ready!"

"Stop! V he draws n friends are chance is los They must their work. village which "Who wer each other. were, they the gorge at alone !" Th safe beyond Through they followe at a lonely c were, crou hardly brea heard by hi An ivy-c their sight passes, it w But lo !] side them, a ments, and I hadn't oughter go. I'm gettin' a chill. I feel the symptoms." I did not feel that I could trust my-self immediately to return to Detroit. British fleet, stationed at Bermuda in