Love Finds the Way

Then before she could reply aught but gaze at him with unfo eyes and quivering lips he plunged into furze bushes on the sea with a broken arm and a lacerated face, to say noth sake, and her behalf, was a still harder one.

James noticed his mistress' feverish haste to get home, but he was still more attracted by the conduct of the bay.

"This 'ere animal has been a goin' of it uncommon strong," he thought; I shouldn't wender if she'd been cuttin' away again. Miss Lilian looks done up, somehow, boo. It's a rum go—a regular rum go. If Sir Ralph says anything more about the horse I shall say, 'Sell her.'"

But Sir Ralph did not say anything

"Gone home to the Towers, papa," said

"She has been a good gallop," said Lilian, "and is quide exhausted, 'I don't think I like her quite as well as I did." "Nor I," said Sir Ralph. "You can seil her, James, or turn her out as soon as

Lilian followed Sir Ralph into the Lilian followed Sir Ralph into the study. Sir Ralph moved to the fire; it was his turn to avoid Lilian now; he shrank from what he knew was coming. "Have—have you had a pleasant ride, my dear?" he asked. "Yes," she replied; "very pleasant. We rode across the heath and round the boundary line."

"And was Harry agreeable:"
Lilian remained stlent.

"Papa," she said, suddenly going up to him, and laying her head upon his shoulder, "why could you not come with lus this morning!" As she spoke she looked at the door and seemed listening.

"I—I had some letters to write," he said. "Besides, Harry was too good a companion to spoil—two are company and three are none. "Papa," she said, drawing still closer and growing paler, but still listening, "Mr. Besant asked me a question—What was that! I fancied I heard something in the hall."

She kissed him and tears filled her eves but the eyes were still fixed on the

A knock came, she started.

Sir Rainh, annoyed at and unwilling to be disturbed, walked to the door and

Then Lilian found the bridle of no your horse until the groom comes up, se, and all her scothing as powerless the hand to stop the animal. She ried to keep it in the direction of the the bushes at the side of the road and disappeared.

Lilian exchanged horses with the groom and rode slowly home. Truly, it had been an eventful day, but the latter incident had completely eclipsed all the importance of the former.

That she was Mr. Besant's promised bride was a hard enough thought, but that Mr. Clifford should be lying in the furn bushes on the state of the state with a broken.

Then Lilian found the bridle of no use, and all her soothing as powerless as the hand to stop the animal. She tried to keep it in the direction of the open road still, for by the way she had intended going there was danger—danger in the shape of an unnegotiable gate barring her road to Rivershall.

This gate, at which was no lodge nor porter, for it lay upon common ground, would present an insurmountable obstacle to the hight-built bay, but not, alast to Libian, for should the animal crash against it, nothing could save her from being pitched over its head, gate and all into the road.

They had just been carrying down some rough granite stones there. Lilian remembered, and a shudder ran through her whole frame as she thought that the runaway would not answer her strain on the left rein, but was making for the fatal gate at a lightning pace.

She tried to listen for James, tried to call out, but her tongue would not utter

She could see the gate, and oh, thank heaven! there was some one

it was only a cow, which had

No, it was only a cow, which had taken flight and was riccoherthing away. The survey she could tarm her, another minute it would be too late.

Blind with passion and fear, the frightened horse saw nothing and sped on fike an arrow from the bow.

Lilian closed her eyes. At that moment she remembered years ago vexing for faither with some childish, infamtile fil temper; how she longed with an intense longing that she could forget it! But of all the years of love and peace, of ever-growing affection and devotion that simple, silly incident alone would haunt her.

Another minute—she could almost feel.

"One how, too. It's a rum go—a regular you will say anything shout the horse I shall say, "Sell her."

But Sir Ralph did not say anything about the horse, he was too full of another without his hat, which was for him a state of excitement. A glance the refer to did him that Mr. elsant and put his proposal.

"I am so glad you are back, my dear," he said, lifting her from the saddle and courtesy. "I grew anxious. Where is Mr. Besant."

"One home to the Towers, papa," said love and peace, of ever-growing affec-tion and devotion that simple, silly in-cident alone would haunt her.

Another minute-she could almost feel "Gone home to the Towers, papa," said Lilian, who seemed to avoid his eyes, and spoke in a slightly constrained tone. "Why, what have you done to that hay?" said Sir Raiph, eyeing the once showy-looking but now utterly pumped-out horse with astonishment. the crash of her face and head upon the uel, cruel stones.
"Papa! papa!" burst from her lips.
"Cling tight, for Heaven's sake!" su

denly came a response.

And at the moment she expected to be hurled over the gate she saw through the haze just gathering before her something like the figure of a man literally thing like the figure of a man literally spring to the horse's neck and throw

For a moment all was dark, then

For a moment all was dark, then when she opened her eyes she saw, for the first thing, the foam-covered bay panting at the gate.

Looking up, she saw for the next that she was lying upon the ground with her head upon a man's arm. A pause and it occurred to her that she knew the face. Gathering together all her confused senses, she recognized the graze and ed senses, she recognized the grave and actually calm face of Mr. Clifford, with two splashes of blood on each cheek and a gash over one brow.

"Thank Heaven!" he murmured, hoarsely. 'I feared you had fainted. Are you hurt?" She looked at him and attempted to

"Not yet," he said. "Please raise this m," and he helped her to do so. "Does eyes fixed upon his face.

"Now the other. Do you feel as if that was injured?"

was injured?"

For reply she rose to her feet and pressed her hand to her forehead.

"Enough of me, please, please," she said, in a strangely deep and thrilling voice—her eyes were all ablaze one moment, all melting the next. "Enough of me, I am not hurt and I deserve it if I were her you what a stress there.

of me, I am not hurt and I deserve it if I were, but you"—what a stress there was upon the word—"you are hurt."
"Nothing of any consequence, thank you," he said, in the tone in which he would thank her for a pencil or a piece of paper. "I'm afraid the horse is ruined, and that's a pity."

She stamped her foot and pointed—actually pointed to his face.

She was on her knees beside him in a moment.

"You are very much hurt!" she wailed. "I knew it, I knew it! Your arm is hanging quite useless. Oh, dear, oh, dear, what shall I do? Oh, if some one would come! Stay; you must stop here you must—alone, until I ride home and fetch them."

He sprang to his feet as if she had struck him.

"I said, yes, if you, Linan, would eens it."

"You would like me to marry him, wap ap."—What is that? Yes, that is some one in the hall, I am sure!"

Sir Raiph listened, he could not understand why Lihan should be so particular in her attention to the hall door to night. She was not so usually. Did she expect Mr. Besant:

London, July 20.—Police dogs have proved so successful on the Continent in tracking criminals or overpowering them when caught in some nefarious act that the thieving fraternity are now retaliating by training dogs to attack their victims, and especially policemen. At Toulouse, France, a band of burglars has been caught who made it their business to train powerful mastiffs that way. A landowner near Toulouse was found the other day lying dead near his home with his throat bitten through. Clutched in his hands, which were stained with animal blood, were tufts of hair, which was pronounced to be that of a dog.

The house had apparently been ransacked after its master had been killed, but the neighbors had heard no suspicious noises. The police were at once put on the track and one gendarme has since unaccountably disappeared. As these criminals' dogs are especially trained to attack policemen, it is feared that he also has fallen a victim to some sudden and ferocious attack.

Montreal City Council Resolves to Enforce the By-law.

Montreal, July 19.-The City Council resolved this afternoon by a three-"Of my treatment at Rivershall I have only to speak with the deepest gratitude sir," replied the tutor, with difficulty. "It is to the fact of your kindness that I am loath to lay so heavy a burden as an invalid upon your care. The 'Arms' is a clean place, and I shall be well taken care of. I implore you to let me go there. I should never forgive myself if I suffered my carelessness to entail so much trouble upon you. Let me go, sir." SURPRISE FOR ELLIS.

York Council Abolishes Office of Magistrate.

Toronto, July 20 .- A surprise sprung upon Mr. Peter Ellis, County Magistrate, yesterday, when he received a statutory notice from the York County Council telling him that the Council intended to discontinue the appointment at the end of November. The Council at the end of November. The Council has the power to create the office and also to discontinue, and the resolution to discontinue was passed at the June session. Nobody seems to know how or why it was done. Warden Henry cannot remember its passing or ever seeing the resolution.

Magistrate Ellis is being gradually crowded out of his appointments. He received $1.400 from West Toronto before it was annexed to the city, and now he is to lose $600 as Magistrate for the county. His only appointment left is Magistrate of North Toronto, for which he receives $100.

shall be compelled to leave a comfortable home and return to—no matter; will you promise me?"

"Why should you?" asked Lilian, in a fever of desire to get help for him.

"He opened the gate.

"You will not," he said; "I thank you for letting me ask you. To-morrow I must prepare to quit the only place in which I have known peace and happiness."

The groom's horse pattered nearer and nearer.

"It is base ingratitude; I will not—I cannot—I—"

He bowed and opened the gate for her.

"His determined face frightened her.

"I promise," she breathed.

"A thousand thanks," he said, trying to speak coolly. "Now, there is only a moment, you have only to stand beside 'Arms,' and will go there immediately and leading the year.

The police were at once put on the track and one gendarme has since or indicate through the grand hall to the library.

Mr. Clifford, very pale and with his left arm hanging uselessly by his side, was standing waiting for him.

That he was in great nain was evident by his white face and blazing eyes: that he could bear it and was straining every effort to show no sign was also made plain by the tight compression of his lips and the clinched right hand.

"I am so sorry to trouble you, sir," he said, trying to speak coolly. "Now, there is only a minimum the propose."
