

ROBIN HOOD FLOUR IS DIFFERENT

This is the Wonderful New Flour

that has made such a sensation throughout Western Canada. Made of highest grade Saskatchewan wheat, in the newest, best-equipped, largest mill on the prairies. Made with the determination to give users better flour-value, greater certainty of baking-success, fuller satisfaction with the final result, whether with biscuits, cake or bread. Housewives throughout all the West admit that Robin Hood Flour gives all this. Therefore, Madam, it is the flour for you.

This flour cannot be described in an advertisement. We use this paper merely to give the introduction—to say: "Let us make you acquainted with Robin Hood Flour."

It is the guaranteed flour. If you are not satisfied with it after two fair trials, ask your grocer for your money back. He will give it to you. Add more water than usual when using Robin Hood Flour. Made of such hard, dry wheat, it absorbs more moisture—producing a larger, whiter loaf.

The difference between Robin Hood Flour and other flours you have to find out for yourself. That there is a difference every woman who now uses Robin Hood admits.

CHAPTER XVII. TOM CHERITON'S SUSPICIONS.

"You were not with me, child, and I thought I could not better fill in the time than by doing something to please you."

"We could have called together about them," said the widow, who was sorry to have missed an opportunity of shopping in the company of her handsome lover.

"True, but I wanted them to be a surprise. And now you have got everything out of me. When you ask me anything, Dora, out must come the whole truth, whether the thing be grave or trivial. You have spoiled my little plot altogether," he said smiling, and kissing her.

She believed him implicitly, of course, and was flattered at the little attention which the imaginary act implied.

"I can't help wondering where on earth that child Dessie has got to," she said, after a pause. "It's such an extraordinary thing to have done."

"She is a woman journalist, Dora. There is an explanation of any amount of eccentricity in that."

"Not in the least. She's the most level-headed little soul on the face of the earth—at least she used to be." She made the qualification, remembering the girl's unaccountable dislike of de Montal.

"Then in that case, why not accept her explanation? She implies she has gone away on business."

"But she doesn't say where. Besides, she's been so peculiar the last few days—ever since we came to town. I don't understand her a bit, and she frowned and shook her head in perplexity.

The subject did not interest her lover just then. He had for his part exhausted the possibilities of the girl's action, had taken such precautions as he could to guard against its interfering with his plans; and thus Mrs. Markham's vapid speculations bored him. There was another subject he had resolved to press forward now with all reasonable speed.

He approached the subject again now, taking it up where he had left it on the previous night; and after saying that he had had letters which would necessitate his leaving England for a time very shortly, suggested that he would let her decide whether the marriage should take place before his departure or after his return.

The widow on her side was all eagerness, and they were in close consultation when Tom Cheriton was shown in.

He glanced round the room in evident disappointment at not seeing Dessie there, and his first question was for her.

"It is most unaccountable, Mr. Cheriton," said Mrs. Markham. "But first let me make you two gentlemen known to one another," and she introduced them. The impression which each formed of the other was exceedingly unfavourable.

"A scoundrel," was Cheriton's inward verdict. "A bulldog," was the other man's thought, while both murmured a word or two of civility.

"There is a telegram for you, Mr. Cheriton," said Mrs. Markham, handing it to him. "We've no doubt it's from Dessie." He tore it open quickly, and a glance told him the contents.

"Strange," he said thoughtfully. "She brought me up on purpose to see her. Do you know anything of this, sir?" he asked de Montal, abruptly with a sharp keen glance.

"I? Certainly not. How is that possible?"

"Anything is possible, as an Old Bailey practice soon teaches you," returned Cheriton, brusquely. "What is your opinion of her sudden step, Mrs. Markham? You know her well."

"I can't understand it at all," was the reply. Mrs. Markham was nettled at Cheriton's tone towards her lover. "She tells me in a telegram that it's a sudden commission of work. But I am bound to say I can't think that's all. She's been very peculiar all the time she's been here. 'Peculiar?' echoed Cheriton, pricking up his ears. "In what way do you mean peculiar?"

"Out of sorts. You know what I mean. Not like herself. Dull, low spirited. I thought she was ill. I found her looking very faint and ill once. You remember—yesterday, God-fro!"

"She explained that was due to Mr. Cheriton's absence," said de Montal, not liking Cheriton's manner at all.

"Dull, low spirited, and not like herself. I suppose that wasn't the welcome she gave when she first met you, Mrs. Markham?" he asked, in his persuasive cross-examining smile and manner.

"Oh, no," replied the widow. "That the curious part. She seemed all right then. It was not till that evening or the next day I noticed the change."

"She was all right, Mrs. Markham; for I saw her an hour or two before she came to you, and she was altogether in her usual spirits." He paused, and then wheeling round on de Montal, he repeated his question. "And are you quite sure still that you know nothing at all of the cause of this absence, sir?"

"I have replied once, I am not accustomed to be questioned in this way. I am not responsible for this young lady's eccentricities."

"Well, we shall see. You will excuse me now, Mrs. Markham. Dessie says in her wire that she is writing to my chambers, and I will go there. I am not at all satisfied; and must look into that at once." With that, he left, shaking hands with Mrs. Markham and bowing very stiffly to her companion.

A BROKEN-DOWN SYSTEM.
This is a condition not due to old age, but which few of them really understand. It is simply weakness—a break-down of the vital forces that sustain the system. No man for what may be his causes (for they are all common) is, in any way, any more than the more prominent being, sleeplessness, sense of depression or weariness, depression of spirits and want of energy for all the ordinary affairs of life. Now, what is the cause of this? It is the lack of a certain strength and energy.

VITAL STRENGTH & ENERGY
To know of these morbid feelings, and experience them, is a sign that the system is breaking down. It is a sign that the system is breaking down. It is a sign that the system is breaking down. It is a sign that the system is breaking down.

THERAPION No. 3
This is a new and powerful combination. No matter how long it has been used, it will be found to be a most effective remedy for all the above-mentioned ailments.

THE EXPIRING LAMP OF LIFE
LIT UP AFRESH.
A new existence imparted in place of what has been a mere existence. This wonderful medicine is purely vegetable and innocuous. It is agreeable to the taste and suitable for all constitutions and conditions. It is a most effective remedy for all the above-mentioned ailments.

THERAPION is sold by Chemists throughout the world. Price in principal bottles 1/6 and 4/6. Purchasers should see that the word "THERAPION" appears on the bottle. Beware of cheap imitations. It is a most effective remedy for all the above-mentioned ailments.

THERAPION may now also be obtained in Drugges (Trustless) Form.

Salt Rheum On the Hand

Yielded only to the soothing, healing influence of DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

In addition to the suffering and annoyance caused by eczema and salt rheum there is always danger of the trouble spreading and becoming chronic. For this reason the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment should be regular and persistent until the cure is thorough and complete.

Mrs. John J. Delory, Linwood, Antigonish county, N.S., writes:—"I want to say that Dr. Chase's Ointment has proven a great blessing to me. I had salt rheum on one hand, and could not get it healed up. The itching was most distressing at times. Two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment has cured me completely, and I gladly recommend it to every sufferer."

In every home there is a demand for Dr. Chase's Ointment. It is particularly useful where there are children. Chafing and skin irritation are relieved at once and eczema is cured by this soothing, healing ointment. 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

CHAPTER XIII. An Important Interview.

When Dessie reached Middlebridge she was a little at a loss to know how to get to see her sister. She did not know whether the nurses lived in the Infirmary, or even whether her sister was on the regular staff. There had been no communication between them for a long time past, and the last letter had only stated the fact baldly that Daphne was going to join the nursing staff of the Infirmary.

Middlebridge was a dirty industrial town, the centre of the Northern trade, with a dirty river, along the southern bank of which lay the chief works, which kept the Infirmary well stocked with bad 'smashes'—as accidents to the workers were called—and gave the hospital quite a reputation as a place where varied and constant practice in surgery could be gained.

But Nurse Morland had gone to it for reasons altogether unconnected with nursing experience. It lay off the highway of the word, and only the barest handful of the sixty or seventy thousand of useful beings who peopled the hive knew anything of life outside it. It was a safer refuge than a desert.

Dessie found her way on foot to the Infirmary, and was going to call a day for her sister when it occurred to her that she had better send her a letter to prepare her for the visit. A sudden meeting, if a stranger chance was to be present, might call for some word or sign which might lead to embarrassing consequences.

She turned back, therefore, and entering a shop wrote a very brief line saying that an extraordinary need had arisen compelling her to come to Middlebridge, and asking her to say when they could meet and where. She was to send word by the bearer.

She got a boy to take the note and wait for an answer, and she watched him as he went up the semicircular carriage-drive that was in front of the building, and saw him deliver the letter to the porter. After a long interval he returned and gave her a note.

"Call here in an hour."

The girl remembered that she had yet to find some place to stay at. She went back first to the station to find out how late she could leave, in the hope that the interview with her sister would be over in time to let her leave and travel by night, and having made a note of the train times she went away to get something to eat. She felt faint and weary, and remembered that she had had nothing since breakfast at Edgcombe Square. Excitement had made her forget food, but she compelled herself now to eat a substantial meal, and then made some inquiries as to an hotel.

Punctually at the expiration of the hour she returned to the Infirmary; and on asking for Nurse Morland, she was shown up to a room, where, instead of her sister, the matron, a very sharp-eyed, clever, quick-looking, little woman, received her, and pounced in a volley of questions already and somewhat brusquely put to ascertain her business.

Dessie listened quietly, and answered very generally, parrying the questions deftly. She was moved by a sort of antagonism until her questioner let out that her motive was a fear lest Dessie had perhaps come to try and take Nurse Morland away, while the matron did not want to lose her.

"You're the first friend that's been to see her for a very long time, you know," she said, shaking her head and looking as though the fact was very suspicious; "and I think well enough of her to wish to keep her."

"I haven't the remotest thought of enticing her away," answered Dessie, smiling at the matron's manner. "It is many years since I saw Nurse Morland. We are very old friends; and it occurred to me to come and see her, all unexpectedly."

At this moment Nurse Morland entered the room. A quick glance shot from her eyes to Dessie's face, and the latter read it as a warning. Then, in a somewhat formal manner, but in a voice of exquisite sweetness and depth, she said, putting out her hand:
