Stiffen the Sinews. In the treachery of Lieut. Col. Maritz and those of his command who have joined in his revolt there appears to be nothing to cause much alarm. He seems to have had sufficient strength to overcome officers and men who would not join in his treachery and to send them as prisoners to the German territory along the frontier of which his command lay. There has been no evidence adduced in the report that Maritz's revolt is meeting with sympathy or that it is likely to grow. It is true, however, that precaution is being taken to deal effectively with any situation which may arise and that martial law has been proclaimed. It should be remembered, however, that this is not a racial struggle and that the Government which has proclaimed martial law and which will deal with Maritz and the other rebels is largely a Government, the principal officers of which are leading Boers. The Prime Minister is General Louis Botha, and immediately after his resignation of his command on the ground that he was not prepared to wage offensive operations against the Germans, although he was prepared to defend the Union against the Germans, it was General Botha who stepped into the breach and took over command in the field, giving as the Times said "a prompt and dramatic reply to the resignation of General Beyers." It was also another Boer who gave a dignified rebuke to General Herzog, who opposed the war measures of the administrator telling him that it was only under such a free constitution as given by the British Government to South Africa that it would have been possible for General Herzog to offer such a criticism. Under German rule such criticism would have cost him his life. Maritz has been closely in touch with the Germans in their own territory and was employed by them at the time of the Hereros' rebellion. He was but a commander of police when he revolted and the incident is apparently but a small affair, but it affords evidence of the machinations of Germany to stir up civil strife in the Union. In all probability the main effect of this revolt, will be to summon up the blood and stiffen the sinews of the British and the loyal Boer, and cause recruits to flock to the standard of Botha. It is said that it was only when the wounded began to be sent through the streets of London that London awoke to the fact of war, and that enlistment began in real earnest. The enlistment actually went on faster than could be coped with by the authorities, and the standard of height and chest measurement was raised toessen it for a time, until arrangements could be made for dealing with the rush of recruits. The fall of Antwerp has had a similar effect, and we have no doubt that a similar result will follow the revolt of Maritz the Irreconcilable.

GERMAN COLUMN AMBUSHED SOUTH OF GHENT. LONDON, To-day. The following despatch of Monday has been received from Ostend. It is reported a heavy engagement occurred to-day near Thourout, a Belgian town 12 miles south west of Bruges. The operations around Ghent have opened favourably for the Allies. The Germans asked for an armistice to enable them to bury their dead, but the request was refused. Advancing confidently against what they imagined to be the remains of the retreating Belgian army, the German column was ambushed by a force south of Ghent. The German soldiers were mowed down in swaths, and a bayonet charge completed their rout. Some six hundred dead were left on the field while the Allies' losses were practically nothing.
