The Submarine Campaign

We have now arrived at the time set by Germany for opening the new sub-marine campaign. Ger-many threatens to sink for opening the new submarine campaign. German without notice and thus without giving time to passengers or crew to 'save themselves by means of boats. Lord Robert Cecil has made it abundantly clear that merchantmen, pursuing their ordinary course of commerce, are not armed to take the offensive against submarines or other enemy craft. They are instructed positively to use their guns only to defend themselves when attacked. In the past a number of ships have been torpedoed without notice and without affording any chance of escape to those aboard, so that there will be little change in the German programme as it is carried German programme as it is carried out in practice. We have no doubt that little attention will be paid to the fact whether a steamer is armed or not. Just as we had finished the last sentence, we received the first cable message this morning, and the first item referred to this matter. Last night the Admiralty made public a list of unarmed British vessels, torpedoed and sunk without notice, up to the end of 1915. The list comprised the end of 1915. The list compris 39 steamers and one trawler, and addition 13 steamers and one sailing vessel of neutral Powers. From the list is excluded vessels sunk of which
