Gentleman Jackson, the Pugilist.

Perhaps the man who did most to popularise the "noble art" was John Jackson, champion of England, and better known to history as "Gentleman Jackson." Unlike most other pugilists who have distinguished themselves for only one trait of excellence, he possessed three--superior strength, science, and pluck. His agility in the ring was extraordinary. At an exhibition of sparring in the "Five Courts" got up in honor of the then Czar of Russia after the signing of "Peace of Europe," on February 7, 1812, Gentleman Jackson demonstrated the marvellous science he possessed, and aroused the admiration and enthusiasm of the spectators. He did much to lift the sport to a higher level, for in his luxurious rooms at Bond Street, he gave lessons in scientific boxing to the nobility and gentry of the age; creating an enthusiasm for the game among a class which had previously been content to watch others perform. To be a pupil of Gentleman Jackson became a vogue, and the "young bloods" of the day did not consider they were thorough in the fashion till they had had their "claret tapped" by the champion of England. It was not, however, only as a scientific boxer that Gentleman Jackson outshone his contemporaries, for he was, in addition, one of the toughest fighters. In his second public fight, when he was only nineteen years of age, he gave such an outstanding exhibition of fortitude that he at once became famous. He was matched on that occasion against Inglesione--a man who only just missed championship honours. Jackson was then far from the accomplished professional which he afterwards became, and he underwent a thorough grueling at the hands of Inglesione. Although he got the worst of the encounter in every round, he fought steadily on. But he was fighting a losing fight all the time, and at last sustained a terrific fall, in which he broke his leg. He wanted to fight for a finish, but Inglesione, with his natural sense of fair play, absolutely refused to entertain such a one-sided proposition, and Jackson's seconds agreed.

Just Folks

SAFE AT HOME.
Let the old fire blaze
An' the youngsters shout
With the drifted snow,
Sprawl full length out,
An' the mother an' I
Sort o' settle down,
An' it's little we care
For the noisy town.
Oh, it's little we care
That the wind may blow,
An' the streets grow white
With the drifted snow,
We'll face the storm
With the break o' day,
But to-night we'll dream
An' we'll sing an' play.
We'll sit by the fire
Where it's snug an' warm,
An' pay no heed
To the winter storm;
With a sheltering roof
Let the blizzard roar,
We are safe at home,
Can a king say more?

Fashions and Fads.

Much drapery is noted.
Even blouse show panels.
The new blouses have skirts.
Dance frocks favor the uneven hem.
The sash generally ties on the left side.
Trilled laces are favored for dandee frocks.
Long pointed tunics have beaded borders.
Long, slender lines are favored for spring.
The beach cape matches the bathing suit.
Elaborate tea gowns feature fringed sashes.
Evening gowns show a strong Egyptian influence.
The picture hat with sweeping plume is coming in.
Eyeset embroidery is very effective on long side panels.
Sports suits of plain and striped homespuns are seen.
Hats of ribbed cotton ribbon will be seen this summer.
Black and brown satin are favored for afternoon wear.
Very smart is the muff and collar set of knitted wool.
Black jet ornaments are extremely effective in white hair.
Chinese flowers are seen on the bodices of evening frocks.
Feltin Beach favors handkerchief liner for summery frocks.
The V-shaped neck seems to be the favored one for spring.
The French frocks are shirred on an elastic at the waist line.
Afternoon frocks of satin have long, closely fitting sleeves.
