There are many ships with the suffix "shima," meaning island, but none have the prefix "abu," or anything like it. It is is thought, however, that the cruiser Sakio, daimed to have been sunk, is the Sikyo. The latter was formerly a fast merchantman between Shanghai and Yokohama, and was recently tranferred into a fleet gruiser. Lieut. Miyoaka says the Yossila, stated in the Shanghai report to have been sunk, is a undoubtedly meant for the Yoshin, the pride of the Japanese navy. It would be startling news indeed, he says, if this ship had gone down, but he scouts the idea. She is one of the fastest vessels in the Japanese mavy, with the remarkable speed of 23 knots per hour. The firing at the outset of the en-gagement was of an indifferent order but the Japanese were creeping gradually dozer to the Chinese ships and their gunners were improving their aim by prac-tice. The Chinese barbette ship Ting Yuen was the first to suffer any severe injury, a Japanese shell bursting in her bat-tery. A ceaseless cannonade was kept up on both sides for an hour and a half, when the Japanese shell Saiklo was rendered help-less and, according to the assertion of a Chi-nese officer, sank soon afterwards. Two of the big guns of the battle ship Chen Yuen were disabled but she continued to use her small guns.
