

nately, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as my colleague knows, is now in England and Scotland opening the Institute for Canadian Studies. However, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) can be assured that I will carry to him the exact meaning and concern of his question.

Both Canada and the United States attach great importance to early extension of their respective areas of fisheries jurisdiction. This matter has been the subject of consultation between the two countries for some time now, as the hon. member knows very well. I understand that the meeting with Dr. Kissinger was most useful. I am not in a position to explain, since I was not present, exactly what that "most useful" means. I do hope the question will be directed to the minister in that regard.

Adjournment Debate

I think it has been made quite clear on more than one occasion that the Government of Canada is determined to extend Canada's jurisdiction out to 200 miles. It has also been made quite clear that although we would wish to do that through an international treaty we are not waiting for the conclusion of that treaty to take action. Has my time expired, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.
