

Some Corrections to "The History of Archaic Times," Page 4

The Changes in the Population in Northwestern Lydia in the Middle Archaic Period.

We have been forced to present only a compendium of the early history so far. The items necessary to make everything plain to the novice naturally became too many and complicated, and the records had to be studied carefully.

We can hardly call the Cits in the Ged district immigrants. They had spread from the Aegean coast. They naturally happened to be there. There was a row of Tavian ^{homes} north and south beginning a distance east of Adramyttium and running southward. The Lithuanians settled at the northern end of the Tavian row and the Latins at the southern, where it met the Anic district. Father (predecessor) was called ataves at first in Latin, in Lettish and Litwa, Taves or Thaves. South of the Litwas or Lithuanians were really Hindu settlers called Pars and farther south near the Letts or Alteri were Beretas, or Barattas (Pars ^{mixed with} Ged, Letts, or Priats).

Teutonic Mans ~~and~~ had moved in from Thessaly and had settled west of the Litwas near Adramyttium. When the Cuds in Troas saw this, they moved east or south-east close to the Litwas, who said they lived ant. Finally, Goths from Chalcidice came and settled west of the Pars. Pars and Litwas called Goths Hitu ~~and~~ ^{turn over}