The Battle at Benares.

And now wait a bit till I sing my song concerning the battle of Benares, which was fought on the 14th of June, 1857...

Early the following morning a bright fire was burning in the office, and through the day the young clerk attended to his accustomed duties...

When Leon returned, the mother of Agnes was seated at her sewing, but there was a heavy flush on her cheek...

Mrs. Collins had never told me it was so, but still I felt that I was in some way connected with it...

A half an hour ago Agnes was sleeping in an adjacent room, and Mrs. Collins was reclining on the sofa...

"I was an orphan, but my father at his death left me a good deal of money...

"I have not more to add," she answered faintly, and then continued, "in a few months returned, and found that my father had died..."

"I will not upbraid you, Mrs. Collins, for the care-worn lines on your temples...

"The next morning, Leon returned to the office, and stated to his employer that he would like to be absent for a few days...

"When prosperity came, Leon did not desert the fair girl who had loved him when he was poor...

The Chronicle.

St. John, N. B., Sept. 11, 1857.

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.

LONDON, Aug. 21st, 1857.

It is not long since every English heart beat more quickly at the prospect of news from the great world...

The newspapers are full of the narrow escapes of some of our countrymen, and of atrocious crimes committed on the 14th of June...
