However, one might moralize that the first Chrisian temple was a stable, though amongst the worshippers were the Kings and wise Men of that day, and never from then until now have there been those who could more fully enter into the spirit of worship towards Him Who is the centre of all love and worship, so doubtless in the little church of the Sacred Heart on Sunday there were those who appreciated the beauty of the music and were inspired to ferver by its grand religious strain, as much or perhaps more than if seated under cathedral dome and circled by the lofty walls ol some famous basilica. To fully appreciate this fine choir it should doubtless be heard in some high ceiled temple, where the great sustained notes might travel and reverberate along the vault and the tremulous piano tones might lose themselves for a moment only to travel back to the ear with increased fineness and sweetness. But even in the limited space of Sacred Heart the effects were fine. The manual of the organ was managed by a master hand, and a spirit of precision and sympathy wielded the baton of the director. The music sung was that director. of the Messe Pontificale by Dubois, and the results were those of oratorio rendered by a long established and well balanced body of singers, Fine effects were given in the "Qui Tollis," where the theme was sustained by a solo voice to the accompaniment of a subdued under chorus. The Credo too had a grand ending, when instead of the customary Amen, the leading word "Credo" was repeated, the effect being that of a climax in the single word expressive of faith. Other particularly beautiful effects were found in the Benedictus and Agnus Dei. Closing Exercises at Loretto Abbey

The closing exercises at Loretto Abey took place on Wednesday, 17th inst., at 5 p.m., before a distinguished audience, the Apostolic Delegate, Mgr. Sbarretti, and a large Cecilia Pones, Irene Hynes and Ethel number of the priests of the Archdiocese being present. The hall and stage of the scholastic institution presented a charming appearance, the papal colors being well in evidence, and the programme presented was of the refined and elevating character which always distinguishes Loretto. An address of welcome was read to the Apostolic Delegate, after which the crowning of graduates took place, the distribution of medals and other honors being followed by a presentation of vocal and instrumental muadmiration.
