CHAPTER XX. A Series of Mishaps.

Yes, she actually did lose her grip on that bough above her. It was when she felt herself falling that she gave that terrified scream which caused the boys' sport to come to a sudden end.

She clutched wildly as she slipped through the branches, but her hands grasped nothing but slippery pine needles. She fell on to the very largest bough, the one that hung farthest out over the water. It bent with her sudden weight, and on she slid over the tip of it. There was nothing beneath but the dark, deep waters waiting to swallow her up.

But—not yet! She felt a sudden jerk at her waist, and instead of falling into the lake she found herself dangling in mid air about twenty-five or thirty feet above the water.

What had happened? A loop of that pink ribbon sash which she had tied so tightly around her waist had slipped over a knot. As soon as she had recovered a little from her fright and dizziness, Dimple guessed what had saved her, but she could not turn her head to see, and dared not even try.

How long would the sash hold? Would the boys come? And what could they do if they did? These questions chased each other through her mind as she swayed there in the wind, but she was still too frightened to think clearly.

In a few minutes the boys came dashing breathlessly through the bushes.

"O Dimple!" gasped Jimmie in a horrified voice, "Whatever happened? How did you get up there? And how ever will you get down?"

"I climbed up, and then I fell," she answered weakly. "O Jimmie! Can't you get me down? Where's Boy Blue?"

Boy Blue was too terrified to speak. "He's right here," answered Jimmie. "Maybe I could climb up and reach you, but—that little bit of ribbon doesn't seem to have much of a hold, and—I wonder how strong it is."

"O don't climb up, don't shake me down into the water!" she pleaded fearfully. "You go home and get Daddy—he'll know what to do. And, Boy Blue, you stay with me. Where are you? Come where I can see you."

"Yes, go for Daddy, Jimmie," said Boy Blue as he came out to the edge of the rock. "Yes, I'll stay right here, Dimple; don't you be afraid," he called bravely up to his sister. His voice was shaky and his face very white, but for Dimple's sake he tried his best to smile.

Jimmie had already disappeared, and the two were left to bear each other company through that terrible time of helpless watching.

The site of the ancient Tiberias is believed to have been unearthed. The alleged discovery of the ruins of the city, which played a notable part in Jewish and Christian history, was made by Jewish workmen who were building a government road near Tabariyeh, the modern town. When the remnants of the old walls and columns began coming to light, the Government immediately stopped the work. The director of the department of antiquities then visited the spot, accompanied by two members of the Jewish Exploration Society.
