CHAPTER III

"She's in the care of her French governess, Silas," his sister says, reprovingly. "Such a nice young lady, Lady Glynne! Such a nice maid!"—for so the worthy old lady pronounced the word, with an impressive drawl. "She and Lollie have come up to the old part of the town to study the lights and shadows of the moonlight—so mamaselle says. She's so fond of my niece, Lady Glynne, and takes such pains with her education!"

"I dare say," Lady Nora responds, with a smile of contempt. "A toady!" she says to herself, with fine discernment. Then she asks aloud, "Where did you get her, Miss Dormer? I fancy I have seen her before."

As indeed Lady Nora has—as the lady's mind of an acquaintance of hers some years ago.

But, before the question can be answered, the door opens, and a tall girl in a plain clinging black gown of 'nun's veiling,' and a dashing-looking young lady in a fashionable black broche silk came in together.

"Yolande, my dear, we've been waiting prayer for you and mamaselle," Miss Dormer says, setting her spectacles low on her nose and looking over them, and elevating her chin and her honest commonplace old face.

"It's too late for young gels to be out o' doors," remarks Mr. Dormer, shaking his head.

"I was afraid I should have to go without seeing you, dear," Lady Nora interposes, with a lustrous melting smile and a fond pressure of the girl's thin hand. "Your dear auntie will tell you what a nice little project we have been planning together this evening!"

"What a long, lanky creature it is!" her ladyship thinks. "And what an expression for a girl of her age—a solemn stare like a virgin martyr in an old picture! Those horrid Methodistical people have ruined her. She will be always an outie, uncomfortable sort of girl. She has no more manner now than figure, and that is saying a good deal! Poor Dallas! And he is wonderfully fastidious about girls for so young a man."

"It was so exquisite a night madam," the governess says, with a little gasp of affected rapture, speaking in English, and English without a French accent, too, "the silver-white lights and the dense black shadows were so beautiful, we forgot the time, mademoiselle and I."

But the governess is visibly uneasy in the presence of Lady Nora, and tries to keep out of the range of her keen eyes, which scrutinize poor "mamaselle," as her employers always respectfully term her, with all the acumen of her worldly knowledge and savor faire.

"Yes, yes," Miss Dormer says, with a rebuking smile, taking up one of the good books; "but we're going to talk of something better than moonlight or sunlight either now, mamaselle."

In a moment "mamaselle," looks meek as a chidden child, and ceases her mundane remarks, with an inquisitive sidelong glance at Lady Nora.

Mothers Advise Their Daughters to Rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Keep Them in Health

A Mother's Advice Restores Mrs. Hall to Health

Lindsay, Ontario.—"I had very poor blood and was bothered with pains in my side and back. I took kidney medicine for a while without success. I got pale, weak and nervous. My mother, who has used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a number of years with very good results, advised me to take it and I did. It did me worlds of good. I have gained twenty pounds and have not felt so well for a long time. You may use this letter as a testimonial to help others if you think it worth it."—Mrs. MARY E. HALL, R. R. 5, Lindsay, Ontario.

A Sickly Child

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly read your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit to you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. GEORGE E. WHITRACKS, 221 W. Madison Avenue, Mahoningtown, Pa.

Every girl wants to be healthy and strong, and every mother wants her daughter to do well in school and to enjoy herself at all times. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for young girls just entering womanhood. Mothers may depend upon it. Remember it is prepared from roots and herbs, contains nothing that can injure, and tends to tone up and strengthen the organs concerned, so that they will work in a healthy and normal manner.

For nearly fifty years it has been used by women of all ages, and these women know its great value. Let it help your daughter and yourself.

who is looking at her steadfastly.

"Will you read the hymn, brother?" Miss Dormer asks politely, but nevertheless holding the hymn book tightly in her own hands.

"No, no, Keren; you read it tonight; my eyes are not very well," Mr. Dormer replies, declining the duty.

For the good man, honest and brave in other respects, can neither overcome his inborn British awe of a titled person nor the dreadful uncertainty that possesses him regarding the pronunciation of certain words of his mother tongue.

So Miss Dormer leads off with decorous fluency through hymn, chapter and prayer.

And then Lady Nora bids them all good-night most sweetly.

"An revoir until to-morrow afternoon, dear," she says, with a light caressing touch of her jeweled fingers on Yolande's soft rose-pale cheek, and a merry, radiant smile at the girl's puzzled, solemn eyes. "Three o'clock, Miss Dormer, at the Pont de Neque, is it not? It will be a charming afternoon!"

The governess hurries to get out of the room the instant prayers are over; but Lady Nora, by a quick movement, intercepts her; and the other has to draw back. And, while she bids Miss Dormer and her brother and niece good-night, Lady Nora is scrutinizing the governess in the bright gaslight with deliberate, smiling, patrician insolence.

"Mademoiselle Bella Glover, I believe," she says, coolly, as she passes her, with a gracious little nod, and speaking in perfect Parisian French, with a very different accent from "mamaselle's." "I am pleased to see you so well placed. So much nicer for you than your post with Mrs. Vavasor!"

"I don't understand you, madam!" the governess stammers, flushing crimson, and tears of wrath and terror welling up into her eyes. "My name is Gantier. You mistake, madam!"

"Gantier, and not Glover?" Lady Nora questions, showing her teeth in a malicious little smile. "You keep as close to the truth as ever, I see, mademoiselle. Chut!" for mademoiselle's visage is purple, and puckering up hysterically. "I have no wish to injure you; you shall tell me all about your good fortune, Mademoiselle—Gantier, by and by."

"Well, there maman," Dallas says, coming into his mother's room an hour later, and finding Lady Nora restoring exhausted nature with a dainty supper and one of Zola's novels, "have you spent a pleasant evening with your friend? She has the merit of novelty in every respect I should say. It must have been delightful!"

"Don't be absurd, Dallas!" Lady Nora responds a little crossly. "I am tired to death! Of course I want to spend the evening with those people for your sake."

"Best of mothers!" murmurs Dallas, helping himself to oysters and Chablis. "Was virtue its own reward, and did you enjoy the feast of reason and the flow of soul with that good lady in the lilac-and-white shawl? I see you did, for you are yawning so."

"I am tired to death," repeats Lady Nora, with a smile which is very like a grin. "However, you shall profit by my experience, Dallas. Miss Dormer is an excellent person, for a cook," Lady Nora goes on deliberately. "She is a worthy, honest, deferential sort of woman, who knows a great deal about housekeeping and marketing. Her name is Keren-happuch—called 'Keren'—Aunt Keren. Don't forget, Dallas."

The young fellow's dark chestnut eyebrows draw together with deep, angry curves between, and his smooth-cropped head droops sullenly.

"And Mr. Dormer—Uncle Silas," purrises Lady Nora saily—"is the very personification of the 'worthy old soul' of comedy-drama, without a scrap of polite education of savoir faire, but full of sterling worth— Isn't that the phrase?—most charmingly snobbish toward what he calls the 'aristocracy,' and with a flourishing business in London and Yarmouth. He is a dyslexic. Why do they say 'dry,' Dallas. Who ever heard of wet salt being used?"

"Well!" Dallas says, curty, ignoring Lady Nora's question.

Bad Breath

Is Usually Due to Constipation

When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication. Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. Try it today.

The Speed of Thought.

Until recently it was generally considered that a thought occurred with the speed of lightning. But modern methods of measurement have shown that the speed of thought is not by any means exceptional.

The time taken for a nervous impulse to travel from the elbow to the brain and thence to the wrist proved that it did so at about 180 ft. a second.

Similarly a frog thinks at the rate of about 90ft. a second, and it takes two seconds for a whale 150 ft. long to realize that he has been harpooned in the tail to lash out with it.

In some peculiar way, however, the speed of thought seems to depend upon the temperature of the body. If a man's body is warm he is able to think quicker than if he is cold; and if his nerves are frozen they will not conduct impulses at all.

Nerves Never too Tired.

A frog at seventeen degrees will think only half as quickly as another at thirty-five, while if the frog be warmed to the temperature of a man the animal will think equally as quickly.

A cold-blooded creature like the fresh-water mussel thinks only at about two and a half inches a second. One of the cuttlefishes thinks at the rate of three feet a second in winter, and the octopus in summer three to five times as quickly.

Many drugs, as well as cold, will decrease the speed of thought—chloroform obviously, and ether and alcohol less obviously.

The ability to think quickly seems to vary, too, with temperament. A melancholic or lethargic man thinks more slowly than a choleric individual. In all cases, however, it is practically impossible to tire out the nerves. They will always think even though the brain, which receives the impulses, may be too tired to deal with them.

Fads and Fashions.

Simple sports clothes are not only more practical, but are in better taste and fashion than fancy ones.

Printed fabrics are used as contrast and trimming quite indiscriminately on frocks of silk and cotton.

MILKMAID MILK IS THE BEST MILK MADE

overblouse have in a measure been superseded by the sports jackets.

Embroidered crepe and voile are charmingly combined in a straight-line frock trimmed with pleatings.

A charming hat to wear, with a sheer dress would be one with a broad brim of lace falling in a veil.

Heather flowers adorn a large hat of granite straw turned up in the back and faced with heather chiffon.

With a short box coat of brown plaid silk crepe bound in yellow is worn a plaited skirt of yellow crepe.

Around the edge of the brim of a hat may be tacked a band of tulle that shades the eyes in a becoming way.

The correctly smart overnight bag may be of suede or morocco with tortoise-shell or metal mountings.

A house of white crepe de chine is worn with a traveling suit of yellow wool fabric with a box-plaited skirt.

Embroidered crepe trims the short little jacket and fashions the draped skirt of a costume of black satin.

As that very necessary neutral shade which fashion always demands, gray seems to be replacing beige and camel.

Two shades of rose crepe de chine are used in a frock with a long, overblouse, which has almost the effect of a tunic.

The large and small hats are at present not rivals for fashion's favor—they supplement each other in the summer wardrobe.

The crepe de chine scarf which matches or harmonizes with the costume seems to have replaced the tulle scarf and fur choker.

The chiffon veil which is worn across the lower part of the face is a fashion that is charming and invaluable for motoring.

The most practical cape is reversible, one side being a color suitable for daytime wear, the other a lighter shade for evening.

A frock of black crepe satin is draped in tulle effect with a little cape falling from the shoulders and a huge rose at the corsage.

A plaited apron and collar and cuffs of organdie are the appropriately simple features of a traveling dress of crepe de chine.

If you wish your veil merely to protect your neck from burning, drop it under the chin, catching it up at the back of the crown of your hat, and allowing it to fall behind.
