> Municipal ownership of the street railways or tramways, as we all call them, has meant a service that is fivefold better than the service under private ownership before 1906. It has meant a profit of sixty thousand pounds ($300,000) a year to be applied in relief of municipal taxes. It has meant a 40 per cent. reduction in fares. For the employees of the trams it has meant the eighthour day, better wages, and uniforms provided at the cost of the municipality.

'Best of all, perhaps, it has meant instant response on the part of the service to the demands of the citizens for improvements. It has meant an equipment that is capable of meeting all exigencies of traffic. And it has meant relief from the debauchery of the government which was in evidence when favor-seeking corporations were ram-
