TANGLED THREADS

A Serial of Thrilling Interest by One of the Most Popular Novelists—
A Well-Developed Plot and Pure Family Reading.

CHAPTER I.

It was an intensely dark night. While with the mist that came from below, and the unusual gloom above, Dr. Rane began to think he might have done well to bring a lantern with him, to guide his steps up Ham Lane, when he should turn in fact. He would not be able to spare time to pick his way there. A gentleman—so news had been brought to him—was lying in sudden extremity, and his services as a medical man were being waited for.

Straight down, on the road before him, at only half a mile distance, lay the village of Dalloway; so called after the Dalloway family, who had been of importance in the neighborhood in the years gone by. This little offshoot was styled Dalloway Ham. The latter name had given rise to disputes amongst antiquarians. Some maintained that the word Ham was only a contraction of hamlet, and that the correct name would be Dalloway Hamlet; others asserted that the appellation arose from the circumstance that the public green, or common, was in the shape of a ham. As both sides brought logic and irrefragable proof to bear on their respective opinions, contention evened itself. And no very remote period the Ham had been a grassy waste, given over to stray donkeys, geese, and gipsies. They were done away with now that houses encircled it; pretty villas of moderate dimensions, some cottages and a few shops, the high road ran, as it always had done, straight through the middle of it. Dalloway Ham had grown to think itself of importance, especially since the time when two doctors had established themselves in it; Dr. Rane and Mr. Alexander. Both lived in what might be called the neck of the Ham, which was nearest to Dalloway proper.

Standing with your face towards Dalloway (in the direction the doctor was hastening), his house was on the right-hand side. He had only now turned out of Dalloway Ham, to which place Dr. Rane had been summoned, stood a little beyond the entrance to the Ham, lying back on the right in the grounds, and completely hidden by trees. It was inhabited by Mr. North.

Oliver Rane had come forth in haste and commotion. He could not understand the message, excepting the one broad fact that Edmund North, Mr. North's oldest son, was supposed to be dying. The servant, who brought it, did not seem to understand it either. He spoke of an anonymous letter that had been received by Mr. North, of disturbance thereupon, of a subsequent encounter—a sharp, brief quarrel—between Edmund North and Mr. Alexander, the surgeon, and of some sort of fit in which Edmund North was lying senseless. Dr. Rane was a gentlemanly man of middle height and slender frame, his age about 30. The face in its small regular features might have been held to possess a dash of offensiveness, but for the resolute character of the firm mouth and the pointed chin. His eyes—rather too close together—whiskers and hair, were of a reddish brown, the latter worn brushed aside from the forehead; his teeth were white and even, and his countenance, though not of a rather too silent manner, of too inscrutable a countenance to be very pleasing.

"An anonymous letter!" Dr. Rane had grown to himself with a sort of disgust, musing from his house as one grows as startled, and pursue his course down the Ham. Glancing across at Mr. Alexander's house, he felt a momentary temptation, to go over and learn particulars—if, happily, the surgeon should be at home. The messenger had said that Mr. Alexander flung out of Dalloway Ham in a passion, right in the middle of the quarrel; hence the summons for Dr. Rane. For Mr. Alexander, not Dr. Rane, was the Hall's medical attendant; so called was the first time the latter had been so called upon.

They had come to Dalloway within a day of each other, these two doctors, in consequence of the sudden death of their old practitioner, each hoping to secure the practice for himself. It was Mr. Alexander who chiefly gained it. Both were clever men; and it might have been at least an even race between them, but for the fact that Mrs. North, of Dalloway Ham, set her face resolutely against Dr. Rane. The reason was inexplicable, since he had been led to believe that he should have the countenance of Mr. and Mrs. North. She did her best in a covert way to prevent his obtaining a practice, pushing his rival—whom she really despised, and did not care a little for—into favor. Her object might not be to drive Oliver Rane from the spot, but it certainly seemed to look like it. So Mr. Alexander had obtained the lion's share of the practice in the best families, Dr. Rane but little; as to the poor, they were divided between them pretty equally. Both acted as general practitioners, and Mr. Alexander dispensed his own medicines. The rivals were not outwardly cordial with each other; but Dr. Rane, no doubt, felt an inward smart at his want of success.

The temptation to dash over to Mr. Alexander's passed with the thought; there was no time for it. Dr. Rane pursued his course until he came to Ham Lane, an opening on the right, into which he turned, for it was a narrow way to the Hall. Land juncos, green and lovely in early summer, with wild flowers nestling in its banks, dog-roses and honeysuckles clustering in its ridges. Here was the need of the lantern. But Dr. Rane went on without regard to inconvenient steps that might lead him to the ditch. Some excitement appeared to be upon him, far beyond any that might arise from the simple fact of being called to a gentleman in a fit; yet he was by temperament very self-possessed, one of the calmest-mannered men living. A stile in the hedge on the left, which he found as if by instinct, took him at once into the grounds of Dalloway Ham; whence there came waiting to him the scent of hyacinths, daffodils, and other spring flowers in delicious sweetness, spite of the density of the night air. Not that Dr. Rane derived much advantage from the sweetness; nothing could seem delicious to him just then.

It was more open here, as compared with the lane, and not so intensely dark. Three minutes of the same headless peace in and out of the winding walks, when he turned a point, and the old stone mansion was before him. A long, gray, sensible-looking house, of only two stories high, suggesting spacious rooms within. Lights shone from some of the windows and through the fan-light over the entrance door. One of the gardeners crossed Dr. Rane's path.

"Is that you, Williams? Do you know how young Mr. North is?"

"I've not been told, sir. There's something wrong with him, we hear."

"Is this bright?" called back the doctor, alluding to the curious dark mist.

"Not it, sir. It's nothing but the vapor rising from the day's heat. It have been hot for the first day of May."

The door yielded to Dr. Rane's hand, and he went into the hall; it was of fair size, and paved with stone. On the left were the drawing rooms, on the right the dining-room, and also a room that was called Mr. North's parlor; a handsome staircase of stone wound up at the back. All the doors were closed; and as Dr. Rane stood for a moment in hesitation, a young lady in gray silk came softly and silently down the stairs. Her figure was small and slight, her face fair, pale, gentle, with the meekest look in her dove-like gray eyes. Her smooth, fine hair, of an exceedingly light brown, was worn in curls all round the head, after the manner of girls in a bygone time. It made her look very young, but she was in reality 30 years of age; 3 months younger than Dr. Rane. Miss North was very simple in tastes and habits, and adhered to many customs of her childhood. Moreover, since an illness seven years ago, her hair had never grown very long or thick. She saw Dr. Rane, and came swiftly to him. Their hands met in silence.

"What is this trouble, Bessy?"

"Oh, I am so glad you are here!" she exclaimed, in the soft, subdued tones characteristic of dangerous sickness in a house. He is lying as though he were dead. Papa is with him. Will you come?"

"One moment," he whispered. "Tell me, not the illness."

"It was caused by an anonymous letter to papa. Edmund—"

"But how could any anonymous letter to your papa have caused illness to Edmund?" he interrupted. And the tone of his voice was so sharp, and the dropping of her hand, clasped until then, so sudden, that Miss North thought he was angry with her, and glanced upwards through her tears.

"I beg your pardon, Bessy. My dear, I feel so grieved and confounded at this, that I am scarcely myself. It is too utterly inconceivable to me. Tell me, what is the letter?" he continued, as they hastened upstairs to the sick chamber. And Bessy North told him in a whisper as much as she knew.

A Good Appetite

Always accompanies good health, and an absence of appetite is an indication of some-thing wrong. The universal testimony given by those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, as to its merits in restoring the appetite, and as a purifier of the blood, constitutes the strongest recommendation that can be urged for any medicine.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, biliousness, jaundice, indigestion, sick headache, etc. Self-love sends out no missionaries. Knock down a liar and you hit the devil square in the face.

Why will you allow a cough to lacerate your throat or lungs and run the risk of filling a consumptive's grave, when by the timely use of Eick's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the patient is relieved and the danger avoided? This Syrup is pleasant to the taste, and unsurpassed for relieving, healing and curing all affections of the throat and lungs, coughs, colds, bronchitis, etc.

The rate of pulsation is 120 per minute in infancy, 80 in manhood and 60 in old age.

Quack legislation kills business. Give Holloway's Corn Cure a trial. It removed ten corns from one pair of feet in fifteen minutes. What it has done once it will do again.

To unlearn is the hardest kind of learning. The usual question is, how much has he, not how did he get it.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvelous rapidity with Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil is earache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above ailment, but also to the hurtful disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, to which the young are specially subject.

The man that pays cash doesn't pay other people's debts.

Always have tail enough in your kite to steady it.

A Wonderful Cure.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY. About a year ago I took a very severe cold, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one half the bottle showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the VEGETABLE DISCOVERY the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know." 3

You need not ask a new bonnet why it goes to the church.

The devil has the number of every fashionable pew.

The great lung healer is found in the excellent medicine sold as Pickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It soothes and diminishes the sensibility of the membrane of the throat and air passages and is a sovereign remedy for all coughs, colds, hoarseness, pain or soreness in the chest, bronchitis, etc. It has cured many when supposed to be far advanced in consumption.

Take notice that the front door to tariff reform is still open.

THE DOCTOR ADVISED THE USE OF LACTATED FOOD.

FOOD.

A Mother Says:

"I Cannot Speak of It Too Highly."

BABY ROBERTSON.

Mrs. W. W. Robertson, of 70 Elliott Row, St. John, N. B., writes as follows: "I enclose please find photo of my baby, John A. Robertson, aged 12 months, weight 29 pounds. He has twelve teeth and is now in the best of health. He was very ill when 2 months old, and Dr. Walker advised me to feed him with Lactated Food. I have used over three dozen packages, and would not be without it if it cost as much again. I cannot speak of it too highly, and I intend to continue its use. My baby weighed 7½ pounds when he was born."

Lactated Food is life to the infant at all seasons of the year; it is a guard and shield from all infantile complaints and sicknesses. Try it, dear mothers; it will certainly save your babies, and make them robust, healthy and happy.
