

CITY GIRLS ELECT
WORK BOARD HEADPlan Leaders' Training Course at Annual Meeting Held in First Church.

Mrs. John D. Detwiler was again elected president of the London girls' work board at the annual meeting held last night at the First Presbyterian church. The meeting took the form of a banquet, which was largely attended.

Interesting plans for the coming season, made last night, include a leaders' training course to be held on Nov. 20 and 27 and on Dec. 4 at the King street Y. W. C. A. A rally of senior girls is scheduled for Nov. 21, and intermediate girls on Nov. 22. On these occasions, which will be inspirational in character, addresses will be given by Mrs. D. C. MacGregor and Mrs. W. L. Armitage. Silver cups from the girls' work board will be awarded again this year for the most successful groups. Two are offered for general proficiency in the year's work and two for missionary achievement.

After-dinner addresses included a talk from Mrs. Detwiler on the place of the girls' work board in the community, its importance as a real incentive to leadership, and its responsibility as a guide to the girl groups of the city. Mrs. Detwiler also gave a very inspirational report of the meeting of the religious education council of Ontario, recently held in Kitchener. Miss McNaughton, also a delegate to the conference, spoke concerning the recent convention, laying stress on the missionary appeal so evident there.

Supper was served by the First Presbyterian church C. G. I. T. group under the direction of Miss Josephine Campbell.

The new girls' work board executive for the coming year is as follows: president, Mrs. J. D. Detwiler; vice-president, Miss Ada Menhennick; secretary, Mrs. Gibbons; executive secretary, Miss Helen d'Avignon; treasurer, Miss Marion Grant; pianist, Miss Doris Werner; other members of executive, Mrs. W. L. Armitage, Mrs. M. E. Albright, Mrs. P. Nethercott, Mrs. W. R. McIntosh, Mrs. Roderick Gordon, Mrs. W. J. Knox, Mrs. W. G. Young, Mrs. J. M. McEvoy, Mrs. James Baldwin, and Miss Bessie McCamus. Representatives from the different churches are yet to be named to this executive.

"No need for alarm in that," replied the Basha at once. "Since she has anchored there it is plain that she has no suspicion of our presence. What manner of ship is she?"

"A tall galloon of twenty guns, flying the flag of England."

"Of England?" cried Asad in surprise. "She'll need to be a stout vessel to hazard herself in Spanish waters."

"Sak-el-Bahr," answered the tall, thin man, "advanced to the rail."

"Does she display no further device?" he asked.

Larocque turned at the question.

"Aye," he answered, "a narrow blue pennant on her mizzen is charged with a white bird—a stork, I think."

"A stork!" echoed Sak-el-Bahr thoughtfully.

He could call to mind no such English blazon, nor did it seem to him that it could possibly be English. He caught the sound of a quickly drawn breath behind him.

He turned to find Rosamund standing in the entrance, not more than half concealed by the curtain. Her eyes showed wide and eager, her lips were wide open.

"What is it?" he asked her shortly.

"A stork, he thinks," she said as if that were answer enough.

"Faith an unlikely bird," he commented. "The fellow is mistook."

"Yet not by much, Sir Oliver."

"How? Not by much?"

Intrigued by something in her tone and glance, he stepped quickly up to her, whilst below the chatter of voices increased.

"That which he takes to be a stork is a heron—a white heron, and white is urgent in heraldry, is it not?"

"It is. What then?"

"Dye not see? That ship will be the Silver Heron."

He looked at her.

"Slife!" said he. "I reckon little whether it be the silver heron or the golden grasshopper. What odds?"

"It is Sir John's ship—Sir John Kilgrew's," she explained. "She was all but ready to sail when—when you came to Arwenack. He was for the Indies. Instead—don't you see?—out of love for me he will have come after me upon a forlorn hope of overtaking you ere you could make Barbary."

"God's light!" said Sak-el-Bahr, and fell to musing.

Then he raised his head and laughed.

"Faith, he's some days late for that!"

But the jest evoked no response from her. She continued to stare at him with those eager yet timid eyes.

"And yet," he continued, "he comes opportunely enough. If the breeze
