explorer's sister, where she is now being educated.

Little Ferida is a most interesting little girl and is as devoted to her aunt as her aunt and all her relatives are devoted to her. She is described as being of a very happy disposition, but has still a wild will of her own, which, however, only serves to make her more attractive. She has been described as possessing unfathomable black eyes; her skin is of a very dark-brown olive color and she has two rows of beautiful teeth. "Her perfectly classical figure," says one German writer, "long silken black eyelashes, boldly arched, deep black eyebrows, and above all, glowing glances, lend a peculiar charm to her small, regularly formed head—a charm which is hardly broken by her somewhat pendant lips."

Feri, as the little one is called, is an affectionate child, but is playful as a kitten and never wearies of teasing her newly-found friends and relatives. When asked if she intends to return to Africa she looks frightened, shakes her little head energetically, tears start from her eyes and she exclaims, "Nie!" ('No! Never!") The memory of the sad life to which she was condemned in Africa is still too fresh in her mind. Mentally she is quite gifted. Besides Arabic and her native Suaheli, she speaks German, French and Italian.
