

WHO?

Who is it, carries down our mark,
Sits down upon each little lark,
And paints our conduct very dark?
The Professor

Who is it, comes before our eyes,
Bespectacled and wondrous wise,
But whom we ne'ertheless despise?
The Senior.

Who is it, the Soph'mores curse,
Who gives in accents clear and terse,
Free tips for running the Universe?
The Junior.

Who tries to prove his knowledge great,
But only shows an empty pate
And lands way down the marking slate?
The Sophomore.

Who is it, that's too green to burn,
And thinks our kind advice to spurn,
Who's forgott a more than he'll ever
learn?
The Freshman.

POLA V. RSE.

DISILLUSION

The Freshman rose in girlish glee,
The morn exams were o'er,
"Oh happy day," she cries aloud,
"I am a Sophomore."

Alas, alack, for the innocent maid,
She'd no visions of woes in store,
Till she got a note from a prof or two—
She's not a Sophomore.

Vassar Miscellany

"500 '07 jokes upon members of the Harvard faculty," says the Boston Transcript, "are usually so thoroughly good-natured that the victim can seldom do more than grin and bear it gracefully. So when Dr. Charles Carroll Everett saw by a printed notice that he was to speak on the devil as one of the series of talks on men who had influenced him, he simply smiled and scored one more mark upon his tally against a particularly roguish student."
