

envelopes, postcards, and different shades, and the prices before the issue of 1859, vary from 2s. to 20s. each. Now would it not be much better to spend your money, in completing a set like this, than to have 3 or 4 stamps of 100 different countries.

Of course, though I have taken Canada as an example, it is not to be supposed that the stamps of all countries are as difficult to obtain. Thus, a complete set of the stamps of Great Britain, may be collected at a very small outlay with the exception of two or three scarce varieties.

At all events, let the beginner try a collection of this sort; he can easily increase it afterwards if he is not satisfied.

Most Philatelic writers seem to think that forgeries are a great curse to philately; of course, we are better without them, but I cannot understand how it is that so many collectors are "taken in." How seldom, if ever, do we meet with a forgery which cannot be detected at a glance.

To guard against buying forgeries, all you have to do is to study your specimens, and when purchasing, if you have a doubt as to the genuineness of any stamp, take the advice of some more advanced collector, whom you will always find willing to advise and assist a beginner.
