recruits, confinement to barracks, or extra fatigue and stoppage of pay may be resorted to, and dismissal from the service for incorrigible characters, at once. The civil power should take cognizance of such individuals on discharge.

If liberality were introduced, there would be far less necessity for punishment of any kind; and any working soldier well knows that forty good men are more useful for all military purposes than eighty bad ones. The good men of a company are continually mounting the guards, doing the fatigues, and attending the bad men, when the latter are absent, waiting on, or performing punishment, or in hospital.

To speak of the clothing served out to infantry men, from braces to boots, would be almost superfluous. Let any one look at the articles as they come from the contractor. He must certainly express his sur-Prise that such rough looking things can ever be made to assume a smart appearance. He will probably conclude that the army is a mine; the contractor takes out the useful Ore, the soldier has to carry away the slag. One will say, Where is the remedy to come from? Not, certainly, from the gentleman Who puts on the trappings of an officer "for the fun of the thing," to get into high ⁸Ociety, to enable him to spend money he never earned, or to give him lustre in the eyes of beautiful ladies: not from any of those; then say from whom?
