

Some wretch who has a most excellent disregard for public property has been cutting articles out of the periodicals in the library. The loss is greater, owing to the fact that the magazines are bound annually. An example will be made of the offender if discovered.

A well-known character about the School in the person of "Krugger" Miller, turned up the other day. C. J. has been with McKenzie & Mann on railroad work between Halifax and Yarmouth, N.S. His future location, according to his own statements, is indefinite.

On Monday, February 2, according to The News, a deputation from the Western University, London, asked the Ontario Government to establish a School of Practical Science in connection with the Medical department of that institution. In the absence of further information in the matter, we cannot express any opinion as to its meaning.

After repeated warnings, which were heedlessly disregarded, the Third-Year Mechanicals were forced, very unwillingly, to seek the services of their own professional barber, and remove the offending and monstrous growth of hair from one of their number. Let this be a warning also to J. P. Oliver and others who would deceive the public in the matter of their age. Let them beware. They are being watched.

There has been formed in the Second Year a debating club. Since they admittedly discuss Engineering problems, they are in opposition to and tend to detract interest from the Engineering Society. The president of the latter has always been anxious to have discussion on the papers and also to have papers read by undergraduates, and surely there is scope enough here for the exercising of the abilities of these embryo debaters, who should be lending their services to our own Engineering Society.

The Third Year, even unto the most diminutive member thereof, have been pleased to give the early lecturer a crowded house at 9.02 a.m. Rumor ran that he who came later than the said time, after a certain day, would have his name blazoned on a scroll of honor—a most enviable distinction. The natural meekness and reserve of the School man, and especially of the Senior, here showed itself, and everyone manifested a desire to waive his claim in favor of some more worthy
