

While participants generally stopped short of saying they expected continued prosperity, they implied a significant measure of optimism; something which has been substantiated by recent quantitative results.