THE LOST CITY OF INDIANA STATE

Wilderness Marks Site of Once Prosperous Site of Justice of Wayne County.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 19.—Lost as completely as any city of prehistoric times, with no sign, no mark, no hidden dungeons, no crumbling ruins to invite speculation as to what it once was, is the once thriving city of Salisbury, Ind. A little less than a century ago it was the leading town of Wayne County, and one of the most prosperous of Eastern Indiana. From 1810 until 1820 it was the seat of justice of Wayne County. Now there is not even a farmhouse where the town stood. Only a country road, once the main street of the town, and a quiet creek mark the site of Salisbury.

Salisbury was founded at the beginning of the nineteenth century and was the first settlement in Wayne County, Indiana Territory. Romantic tradition says that its location was the trying place of Indian lovers supplied by a band of pioneers and both killed in an attempted capture. Although regretting the unnecessary tragedy, the frontiersmen gazed with admiration at the natural beauty of the scene, and thereupon founded a village, with the curse of the old Indian mother ringing in their ears, that the town should not live, but would disappear from the face of the earth.

In 1811 a court house was built, and as a necessary complement a jail. Dwellings were rapidly constructed, stores were opened, churches built, and Salisbury became an important trading center. Satisfactory treaties with the Indians strengthened the town, and the pioneers believed Salisbury was destined to become a city of importance in the new country.

Before Indiana was admitted to the union in 1816 several hundred people were proud to call Salisbury home. It was about this time that the first clerk and recorder of Wayne County wrote these words on the back of the original plat: "The town of Salisbury stands on a beautiful site on the west of Clear Creek, Wayne County, Indiana Territory, in a fine neighborhood, envied by rich land, no better water in the world, the air salubrious, and its elevated station commands an extensive and beautiful prospect. And we flatter ourselves that in a few years art and her sister, industry, will convert it into a forest to a flourishing inland town."

For a time it seemed that the dream of the court official would come true. Brick buildings replaced frame ones and log cabins, dressed lumber abounded, and all seemed to prosper. But the progress and growth were only for a time. In 1820 the county seat was moved from Salisbury to Centerville, where it remained until 1873, when it was removed to Richmond. The loss of the county seat was the beginning of the end. The population began to dwindle, and, strange to say, the town itself shrank in proportion, for, with the removal of a family, down came its habitation and piecemeal accompanied its former occupants to their new abode, to be again erected.

Log by log, timber by timber and brick by brick, Salisbury scattered to the four winds, until in 1838 there remained but a dozen families, and a few years these too, departed, and not a human being lived at the former county seat.

For many years some of the old houses remained, but slowly, irresistibly, nature claimed her own, and today nothing remains but fertile ground on either side of the road which was once the main street. No disaster hurried the untimely end of Salisbury. It came and went by the hand of man. About two and a half miles west of Richmond and a short distance south crosses the old National road. In this crossroad, about one-quarter of a mile south of the National road, was the northern boundary of Salisbury.

Salisbury was the birthplace of a number of men who in later years became prominent figures in the affairs of the country and state. The greatest of these was Oliver P. Morton, who was governor of Indiana. When the county seat was moved to Centerville, Morton's parents located there.

MEANS LOSS OF 50,000 VOTES

McCarren's Denunciation of Hearst, to His Followers, Sad Blow to Democrats.

New York, Oct. 18.—The speech of Senator McCarren, of Brooklyn, last evening, denouncing W. H. Hearst, the Democratic candidate for governor, was one of the sensations of the campaign. It is estimated that what McCarren said will cost Hearst no less than 50,000 votes and assures Hughes a plurality of at least 25,000 in King's County.

This will be a sad blow to the Democratic ticket, as Mr. Hearst had been very popular in Brooklyn and had depended very largely on that borough to roll up a big plurality in Greater New York. He won there last fall when running for mayor on the municipal ownership ticket by about 15,000.

McCarren is known to be the most aggressive fighter in the Democratic politics of New York State. Moreover he is credited with being one of the most intelligent and long-headed in the bunch.

He has been openly charged, time and again, with other trusts than the Standard Oil and other trusts. Albany and he has not denied the charge. Nevertheless he is still the undisputed leader of the great King's County Democratic organization, and there is no doubt that his speech flayed Hearst as a traitor will have a widespread effect.

Even since the Buffalo convention it is said, the rank and file of the organization has been waiting for the word from McCarren to knife Hearst and now that they have got it, it is practically certain that they will obey.

Apparently McCarren has thrown up all hope of saving his local ticket, against which the Hearst league had put up independent nominations. While still preserving technically the regularity of the organization, he has boldly advised his followers to get out and work against Hearst. All through the Buffalo convention and its preliminary proceedings when the dickens was going on with the Hearst managers, McCarren steadfastly advised Murphy not to have anything to do with Hearst. His delegation voted solidly for Sulzer and they begged the Tammany people while the voting was going on to desert Hearst.

Ever since then the senator and his organization have been lying low. It was expected that he would have something to say when the King's County Democratic committee met to ratify the Buffalo ticket, but no one there has closed, and that D'Annunzio may take himself and his retainers, and his wonderful wardrobe, which, perhaps, no modern except the late Marquis de Anglesy, has equaled, away from the environs of Florence for ever.

In his personal habits and surroundings Italy's greatest purist is as exacting as the language which he employs. His home, which he shares with his son, his clothes are all regulated with the finest regard for picturesqueness combined with cleanliness and high finish. His servants are obliged to be as spotless as soldiers; woe to him whose shoulders show any trace of his occupation, and whose dress is not means practically sure dismissal.

No using the dust on O'Annunzio's tables to write one's name in. Each table and chair and cabinet is so clean that they seem to be saying, "Look at us; we need no woman here." Even his antiquities—there are many and fine ones—have an air of brightness up in a modern atmosphere. The same carelessness is shown about his person. I do not think any one ever saw Gabriel D'Annunzio in anything but the most spotless of linen, the newest of neckties, and the most creased of suits, and still, to tell the truth, he does not look as though just out of a bandbox.

The report is probably not exaggerated which credits the poet with 25 pairs of boots and shoes, hats going in to the fifties, shirts galore, 200 neckties, and at least 20 pairs of pajamas. For instance, if he is to see a lady or a gentleman, the costume will differ, and with it, of course, shirt, necktie, hat, shoes, cane, etc. As for the pajamas, if he feels depressed, he puts on pink ones to cheer himself up; if he is composing poetry, garments of azure blue assist the muse, while the writing of love letters requires candid white.

An excellent story of D'Annunzio is going the rounds. At a dinner party given by the Countess F—the poet entertained the guests in the reception salon with a dissertation on the place which should be accorded genius over rank. The aristocratic people present were properly humbled. Just then the major domo announced dinner. The guests, according to the etiquette of precedence, trooped into the dining room. The poet found himself at the tail end alone with a plain American. The American signed to him to pass.

"Pray proceed," said he, "For I am neither a genius nor an aristocrat."

BRITISH COLUMBIA LEADS IN TIMBER

Has 182,750,000 Acres of Woods, or Greatest Compact Area in North America.

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 19.—The acreage of the leading timber countries of the world is, in round numbers, 3,420,000,000 acres. Of these acres Canada owns 600,000,000 and British Columbia is the possessor of 182,750,000 acres. British Columbia indeed possesses the greatest compact area of mercantile timber on the North American continent. The available supply would have been infinitely greater than it is, had it not been for the terrible forest fires that raged in the interior in years gone by.

As far north as Alaska the coast is heavily timbered. It is here that the lumbermen or loggers find their chief occupation, selecting only as "timber" the most valuable species. Among these the most widely distributed and valuable is the Douglas fir, which on the coast attains immense proportions, sometimes towering to a height of 300 feet, with a base circumference of as much as 50. The average of these trees is 150 feet of limbs, and five to six feet in diameter. This fir is the staple of commerce, prized alike for its durability and its strength. Next in importance are the cypress and red cedar, both of which are very valuable. And then comes the white spruce and the hemlock.

Already there are between 100 and 150 sawmills in the province, big and small, and with the many shingle mills, planing mills, and sash and door factories, logging plant, railways, and the tugboats employed in the industry, the capital represents some $20,000,000. Apparent important requirements for British Columbia timber are less favored countries are ties and railway sleepers and blocks for paving. These industries the Government is actively promoting, and whereas previous to 1902 the Government revenue from this source was less than $100,000 a year, in 1902 it amounted to $500,000, and this year is expected to exceed $650,000.

Now all timber is cut by special license granted for an area not exceeding 640 acres and renewable annually. The number of these licenses granted last year was 2,500, and represented 1,400,000 acres. The logger's life is doubtless a hard one, but it is eminently healthful. The loggers are for the most part Eastern Canadians, with already a generous sprinkling of native-born British Columbians. Almost invariably the types of men engaged in logging are of magnetic physique, and their bodily health and strength are splendidly maintained and fostered by the wholesome surroundings.

Hardly any white man engaged earns less than $3 per day. The lower grade branches of unskilled labor are in logging in the hands of Japanese, Chinese, and a certain number of half-breed Indians.

THE JAP SEAL RAID

Reports Reaching Vancouver Say It Was Deliberately Planned.

Victoria, B. C., Oct. 18.—Clear evidence is forthcoming by advice received by the steamer Empress of Japan that the raid on the coast by Japanese sealers was premeditated and the statement that the Japanese landed for water and were treacherously fired upon by the Americans, as reported to be untrue.

Hunters of the raiding schooner, Toye No. 2, which appeared off St. Paul Island two days before the raid, went to the captain with the ultimatum that unless he permitted them to go ashore and seal seals on the rookeries they would refuse to work, and compel him to return. The master agreed. Further discussion took place as to the division of the prospective spoils and knives were drawn.

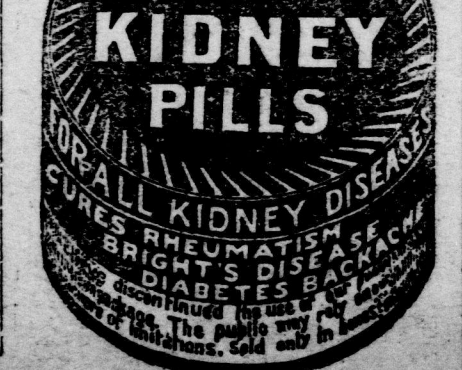

About midnight boats were lowered with oarlocks muffled and sent in the vessel being but a mile from the rookery in the fog. Four other boats followed, and in two hours 192 seals had been slaughtered and brought on board the schooner. Had the sealers been satisfied they could have escaped, but another raid was decided upon, the boats going in the second time at 4 a.m. At 6 o'clock the fog lifted and those on board the schooner sighted the guard coming.

Warning shots were fired, but the raiders were too busy skinning seals to notice, and only when the guards came close did they sight the natives. Then they succeeded in getting only one boat out, in which four men sought to get to the vessel.

One Meada, a seaman, was shot through the breast, and two others were wounded. The body of the dead man was taken in salt to Japan and landed without the knowledge of the authorities.

Charles Francis Brush, the noted Cleveland electrician, has on his office door: "Office hours, 11:30 to 12." He is there promptly and never works overtime.
