The Paterson Bank Failure-Meeting of Creditors.

Port Hope, Ont., Jan. 28.-A meeting of the creditors of the Midland Trust Company was held vesterday. Fully 300 people were present, a large majority consisting of farmers, and in the gathering there were nearly 100 ladies, all depositors of the bank. Assignee T. Dixon Craig stated that the late Stanley Paterson had left a will appointing his widow sole executrix. Mrs. Paterson had made an assignment of the whole estate to him in trust. Mr. Craig then proceeded to read a statement of the assets and liabilities. The statement showed a deficit of over $17,000.

Death of the Insurgent Leader Aranguren, Confirmed.

Washington, D.C., Jan. 28.-Senor Dupuy De Lome, the Spanish minister, has received several telegrams from Havana, concerning the death of the insurgent leader, Aranguren. They are from Secretary-General Congosto, the early ones stating briefly the fact of the killing, and the latest one, adding the following details:

"I have seen the corpse of Nestor Aranguren; also I have examined his documents and have seen his seal in his pocketbook. Among other things he had two buttons from the uniform of Col. Ruiz. He had a bullet in the forehead. With him were killed four more and five taken prisoners. There is hope of finding where Ruiz is bur-

After the installation the members of the lodge and visiting brethren were furnished with light refreshments by the officers-elect. Myrtle Lodge is increasing very rapidly in numbers. New members are coming in nightly. -A Cleveland dispatch says: "It is stated that Hon. Tom L. Johnson has practically sold out his interest in the big consolidated street railway in this city. Mr. Johnson originally held between 12,000 and 15,000 shares of stock and was the largest shareholder in the company. It is understood that the stock has been acquired by friends of Henry A. Everett, the former president of the company, and president of the London (Ont.) Street Railway

Company. ALWAYS TO THE FRONT

Last evening a fur collar with mink tails was advertised in the city papers as lost. As usual, The Advertiser was the means of its recovery. At noon today, within 24 hours after it was lost, the Advertisement in The Advertiser. A STREET RAILWAY CHANGE.

All the belt line cars reversed their routes today, and are running northerly on Richmond street, easterly on Central avenue, and westerly on Dundas street. This was done in consequence of the city engineer's complaint to provide a better service on Dundas street going west. A car now passes in that direction every two or three minutes. Of course, the service on Dundas street going east is now minus the belt line cars.

MISSION CIRCLES An interesting quarterly union was held yesterday afternoon in the Talbot Street Church, when the usual reports were presented and timely suggestions made for the more effective carrying out of the circles' work. After tea-to which the husbands and brothers of the ladies were invited-a public meeting was held, when stirring addresses were made by Rev. C. S. G. Boone, the new pastor of the Maitland Street Church, and Rev. J. G. Stuart, of Knox Church, South London. Rev. Ira Smith presided in his usual genial style. A feature of the occasion was the singing of the piece, "A Mighty Fortress," by the male quartet from the Adelaide Street Church, including Messrs. Charles Maynard, Charles G. Moorhead, Wm. An adjournment to Kent's refreshment parlors was made at the close excellent spread. Catchy songs and witty speeches followed, and the party dispersed about midnight.

A CLEVER YOUNG WOMAN.

Miss Oliver at the Auditorium—A Good Audience and a Delightful Entertainment.

Miss Katharine E. Oliver, the celebrated Scotch reader, appeared at the Auditorium last night, and her dramatic recital was a treat which will be long remembered by those who were fortunate enough to hear her, and she lacked not hearers, for the hall was filled. The greater part of the gallery was occupied by medical students. about 70 in number, who, after each selection by Miss Oliver, entertained the house with college songs. On the stage were a number of palms, tastefully arranged. Rev. Robert Johnston briefly introduced Miss Oliver, and from the first the charming personality of the young woman won the sympathy of the audience. Her pleasing, highlycultured voice, her unaffected earnestness, unforced vivacity and easy, graceful movements created at the outset a favorable impression, which quickly deepened into a feeling of the greatest admiration as the reader's conception of Scotch characteristics and her ability to portray them so delightfully were more and more unfolded. Miss Oliver's thorough mastery of the Scotch dialect eminently enables her to reveal all the humor and pathos of that most emotional of languages. Her pure accent discovers hidden beauties in the dialect, shades of meaning that might otherwise go unnoticed by those who are but little familiar with it. The first number on the programme was from J. M. Barrie's "Little Minister," and described the scene at Nanny Webster's mountain home when old Nanny was about to be taken to the poor-house. "The Play Actress," by S. R. Crockett, was the source from which it was returned to the owner, being the second reading came, and a warm harded in to this office by Johnnie sympathy was aroused for the great Doyle, of 462 Colborne street, who read preacher and his little granddaughter, Allie. Miss Oliver then rendered two of Burns' poems: "To a Louse, on Seeing One on a Lady's Bonnet" was the first, and the reader prefaced her rendition of this, one of the poet's rarest gems, with a few remarks on the genius of the man who could see a poem in the most trivial circumstance. "The Cotter's Saturday Night" was the next selection. A variation in the programme by a dialect story of a Dutchman serenading his sweetheart followed, and the first part was brought to a close by the rendition, by request, of "Tam o' Shanter," and the applause which followed was very enthusiastic. At this time a magnificent bouquet of meeting of Baptist Women's Circles red roses was sent down from the gallery to the platform by the medical students. "Character Sketches of the Drumtochty Fouk," arranged from Ian Maclaren's "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," constituted the second part of the programme, and in it Miss Oliver's rare ability to impersonate was more strongly displayed. The story of Dr. McLure's trip through the flood to save a cotter's wife wrought upon the feelings of the audience greatly, and when the good old doctor "slipit awa" there were many moist eyes. An impersonation of Mrs. Macfayden, "A Drumtochty Critic," concluded the evening's entertainment. Another visit by Miss Oliver in the spring is spoken of as probable. She may be sure of a large assembly to greet her on her reappear-

Success.

TRY OUR

How It Was Achieved by a Man Distinguished in His Calling.

We Never Know That Enough Has

Been Done." A writer in a New York monthly, the name of which is the title of this article, reports an interview with the distinguished lawyer, Joseph H. Choate, which does credit to the interviewer's sagacity in presenting points of interest. We take the liberty of quoting a passage from this encounter of student and sage:

"You have had long years of distinction and comfort; do you find that success brings content and happiness?" 'Well," he answered, contracting his brows with legal severity, "constant labor is happiness, and success simply means ability to do more labor-more deeds far-reaching in their power and "I mean," I explained, "the fruits of effect. Such success brings about as much happiness as the world provides." that which is conventionally accepted as success: few hours of toil, a luxuriously furnished home, hosts of friends, the applause of the people, sumptuous repasts, and content in idleness, knowing that enough has been done." "We never know that enough has been done," said the lawyer. "All this sounds pleasant, but the truth is that the men whose great efforts have made such things possible for themselves are the very last to desire them. You have described what appeals to the idler, the energyless dreamer, the fashionable dawdler, and the listless voluptuary. Enjoyment of such things would sap the strength and deaden the ambition of Lincoln. This man who has attained to the position where these things are possible is the one whose life has been a constant refutation of the need of these things. He is the one who has abstained, who has conserved his mental and physical strength by living a simple and frugal life. He has not taken more than he needed. and never, if possible, less. His enjoyment has been in working, and I guarantee that you will find successful men ever to be plain-mannered persons of simple tastes, to whom sumptuous repasts are a bore, and luxury a thing apart. They may live surrounded by these things, but personally take little interest in them, knowing them to be mere trappings, which neither add to nor detract from character.' The sentence in the above which will London, Jan. 28.—It is announced in find echo in the heart of everyone who a special dispatch from Pekin that either has won success, as the world (after Russia had offered China a loan estimates it, or who is nearing the end on the same terms as Great Britain), of resources of years and strength is China invited Russia to guarantee to this: "We never know that enough defend her against the possible dis- has been done." He could have put it pleasure of Great Britain. Russia, it negatively, "We know that enough has appears, was evasive in her reply; but, not been done." At the beginning of a youth's career he knows that there is a great deal to be done; and as his vista becomes broader the labor before him increases in amount and in complexity, and the urgency to do haunts him continually. Thus his career is formed, his habits fixed, and he will toil on till his hands fall and his head droops upon his breast from final ex-

Mr Choate waved aside further inquiries by concluding the interview-"but no more," he said. There is further a feeling in the mind of the toiler who is approaching the close of his Che Foo to the Mercury, of Shanghai, career. He knows as a matter of information that his powers are failing, and he may be dimly conscious of it. This decline has consequences to the thinker-to the writer, lawyer, preacher, and to any whose duties require clearness of eye, steadiness of nerve, soundness of judgment and courage. He does not wish to linger superfluous upon the stage, but he knows that idleness, and what the world foolishly calls ease, means to him not only intolerable ennui, but a swift acceleration of the inevitable decline to impotency and death. Therefore it is that he distrusts himself, and seeks security in added carefulness, solicitude for success in the work he has in hand, and a resort to the only means he has for securing it, added toil. There are two periods in a man's life when he most appreciates approval, the one when he is developing his powers, and the other when he is losing them. To the one, approval is an assurance that he is making progress. To the other it gives encouragement in the evidence that his loss is not yet apparent to others-that there will be some time yet before the conscious beginning of the eclipse will merge in total darkness. And yet neither the young man nor the old man can know with any degree of certainly of himself by what is said to him. Good people know that the young man needs and is helped by encouragement; and there is a tenderness for the old which will hide unwelcome truth from them. The old are supposed to be past the time when criticism can do them any good-they are set in their groove, and liable to be both selfpinionated and self-appreciative. This may be true in some, perhaps in a majority of cases-because it is a natural result of time and of successful labor. Even if he has corns on both feet. But | But if the old man be wise he will he is a stronger, happier and wiser avail himself of criticism, and he will man if he uses Putnam's Painless find friends who are true enough to find friends who are true enough to
