Thomas' strange te'epathic drama,
"The Witching Hour," which the Messrs. Shubert will present at the Princess next week, did more than any other medium toward bringing out the verdict of not guilty for Mrs. Dora McDonald, who last spring was on trial before Judge Brentano for the murder of Webster Guerin. In all her moods, from the moment the police selzed her as she stood above the prostrate body of Guerin until the jury strate body of Guerin until the jury way or any other such place, exemption being given to owners of real estate, who may be allowed to erect a board on a vacant lot, advertising sale of same.

This bill if passed in committee wind affect and deprive of a means of livelihood, in the City of Toronto alone, over 250 men, and affect many himdreds more, comprising bill posters, painters, carpenters, printers, lithographers, billers, cierks, as well as in our literature of the committee of the comm moods, from the moment the police seized her as she stood above the prostrate body of Guerin until the jury was polled, Mrs. McDonald was the atric, and her desire to seek rest and quiet in the sunny south immediately after her acquittal was an anti-climax. The world, perhaps, will never know how much the Thomas play had to do with relling away the vision of the penitentiary door that confronted her for many days. Judge Brentano sympathized with the McDonald jury. The trial had been a long drawn-out one, and this acted upon the nerves of the jurors like solitary confinement does upon some prisoners. Therefore, when some one suggested an evening at the theatre for the twelve men the judge thought it was just the thing, and theatre for the twelve men the judge thought it was just the thing, and the jury was conducted to the Garrick Theatre, where they literally drank in the metaphysics of the play; and, rea-soning by analogy, those residents of the Windy City who thought the case against Mrs. McDonald was too strong admit of acquittal, are blaming the play for the attitude of the jurors who tersely defended their action for freeing the prisoner.
