OSLER CRITICAL OF HOSPITALS IN ENGLAND

Tells People They Are Behind Times and Many Are Fag Headed

Work in Which London Society Women Are Engaged—Some Cases

(London Daily Sketch.)

A row of little children, among them the sons and daughters of Mrs. H. B. Irving, Mrs. Bouchier, Lady Mond and Mrs. Mark Hambourg, handed bags of money to Princess Henry of Battenberg yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting of the St. Pancras School for Mothers in St. Pancras Town hall.

One little girl was so anxious to begin walking backward away from her mother that she dropped her bag on the floor—but royalty didn't mind, and stooped to pick up the bag herself.

The Duchess of Marlborough, as president of the school, was in the chair, wearing a graceful plum colored gown and a tulle-swathed brown hat.

In introducing the speakers the duchess said that the poor, being compelled to begin the work of their school at the wrong end, girls ought to be taught domestic hygiene and mothercraft, for a well-cooked meal was a better antidote to drink than legislation.

The Lesson—After Mrs. Pember Reeves ruffled the serene and flowery atmosphere of the meeting by an impassioned speech, in which she told something of her research work into the causes of infantile mortality.

She said it was not possible for the people to make healthy homes on their wages, even where these were regular and the husband was sober, and she applauded the work of the School for Mothers and the magnificent teaching of cookery in the elementary schools, because through these the women and girls would learn that it was not possible to bring up families in London on 2s a week.

When this impossibility had been shown to them the people would insist on better conditions.

Things were not cheaper in the areas inhabited by the poor, been many rich people imagined. The poor paid twice as much rent per cubic foot of space as the rich did, while for food they were bought by the pennyworth, and coal which they bought by the paper-bagful, they paid half as much again.

Some of the food might be cheaper, but it was such as the children of rich people would not be allowed to touch.

As Well Say Champagne Mrs. Reeves went on to say that she went among the poor with the idea of teaching them that milk was the proper food for babies. She might as well have told them to give their children champagne or get them motor-cars for their sakes.

The poor could not afford good milk. They had to use the tinned sort, which even the manufacturers did not recommend for infants.

One of the actual "budgets" read by Mrs. Reeves in support of her plea was that of a father, mother and six children. It contained the following items, the total outlay not having to exceed 2s. 6d.:

Rent, 8s. for three tiny rooms. Starch, soap, soda, 5d.; other things, 1s. 10d.

Burial insurance, 1s. 8d.

Coal, 1s. 1d. for six children.

The baby had to be washed with the same piece of soap that was used in the bath, explained Mrs. Reeves, and it was not very pleasant for the baby when bits of cinder had become embedded in that place.

The burial then seemed abnormal, but what could the people do? In Lambeth and Kennington the undertakers would not bury a tiny infant until they had 80s. paid down in cash. If the parents could not produce this they were buried.

The Schoolboy's Wisdom

If men chose their wives with a view to their being good mothers they would choose only those who had good teeth, declared George Thomson, L. D. S., who spoke of the good dental work done at the St. Pancras School for Mothers.

Children's teeth ought to be examined when boys and girls were three years old, and proper attention would spare them the miseries of toothache. Sound, hard foods, especially apples, would keep teeth clean without such artificial aids as the toothbrush. A schoolboy followed Nature when he stole, and ate, sour apples.

Lady Meyer, in appealing for funds for the school, said that St. Pancras did not thoroughly appreciate the excellent work that was being done there were several big railways and other companies that drew their workers from the district, and she wanted to make these companies subscribe. If she was a big shareholder she would go to the meetings and ask the directors whether they were going to have big dividends and small babies for the workpeople or smaller dividends and big healthy babies.

The amount handed in by the children was £140.

TOO LATE!

At a family luncheon at which three generations were present the conversation was disturbed by a small voice calling insistently, "Grandpapa! Grandpapa!"

For a time the old man devoted himself to his conversation and his salad, regardless of the voice which kept calling "Grandpapa!" At last, compelled to pay attention to the interruption, he said something about little boys being seen and not heard, and the rebuke silenced the lad. When the meal was over "grandpapa" turned to his little grandson and said, "Now tell me what you want." "It is too late now, grandpapa." "Why is it too late?" "Because I only wanted to tell you there was a caterpillar on your lettuce!"
