Yet never ran—away. Another remarkable feature of the West is the lantern. The whole fabric of Western society would plunge into chaos were it not for the mild and unostentatious lantern. Every man has a lantern. In the East we associate lanterns with barns and horses, and when you come West and your host takes you out in the evening with his lantern, you get the impression that you are a new horse about to be stowed away in a strange stable. In the East the adoring lover gently murmurs—

"Meet me by moonlight alone, love."
But the Western swain does not say this. He puts NEW BRUNSWICK PAPER CO. "Meet me by moonlight alone, love."

But the Western swain does not say this. He puts in his plea with just as much devotion, however, and then eloquently adds—"P. S. Pli furnish the lautern." A man out here doesn't pretend to be anythody without a lautern. A lautern occupies the same important relation to humanity in the West as over shoes do to humanity in the East. Summer evenings they court out doors here as they do in New England. But the lautern makes a difference. In the early gloaming the Western twain sally forth, both dressed sprucely, and both very devoted. He carries her on one arm, and an unlighted lautern on the other. When darkness settles upon the earth, he fires up the lautern, drops on his knees, and tends to business.

The lautern to a large extent takes the place of the moon in the eye of poesy, out here. So we have odes to the "soft launbent lautern," and we hear of the "silvery rays of the lautern," and fall down and pay homage to "Sweet Lautern, queen of night." Wonderful Histrionic Powers.—Mrs. Mathews tells some extraordinary anecdotes of her husband's powers of personation of the stage, which were so marvelous that he could without change of dress assume a character so completely as to deceive his most intimate friends. The personage thus assumed went by the name of Performan; once he was expelled from behind the scenes of the Liverpool Theatre, where he was acting at the time, as an intrusive stranger. More than once he played off the same trick in the green-room of Drury Lane amidst his brother actors without his identity being suspected. Indeed the eccentricities of this suppositious gentleman became so celebrated that one night the Dutchess of Devonshire came from her box to the green-room to have a peep at him. He sat down beside her, entered into conversation, complimented her upon her beauty, while she was all the time convulsed with laughter. No one knew who he was or whence he came, but as the habitues of the theatre had the entree behind the scenery a stranger more or less was not remarkable. As no gentleman, unless he was performing in the play, was permitted to enter the green-room except in evening dress, the costume afforded no clue to his detection. "No one," to continue in the writer's words, "could tell how the gentleman got admittance, and therefore, there was no mode of excluding him. Every night he attracted inconvenient numbers to the green-room; and on nights when my husband performed it was a matter of much regret to the performers that 'Mathews al-ways came to the theatre too early or too late to see 300 doz. White Dress Shirts MERRITT'S BUILDING, PRINCE WILLIAM STREET Early Days of Edmund Kean.—He afterwards went to Beliast, where he had the honor of performing with Mrs. Siddons. The first part he played with her was Osmyn, in "Zara;" but he was grossly imperfect, as well as intoxicated, and excited the great lady's supreme disgust. Yet the next night he more than redeemed himself, at least as an actor, by his performance of Young Norval. The star pronounced that he played "well, very well; but," she added, with a lofty look, "it's a pity there's too little of you to do anything." She little thought that he was one day destined to snatch the sceptre from the Kemble grasp. In 1806 Miss Tidswell procured him an engagement at the Haymarket to play small parts—they were very small indeed, servants, alguazils, messengers—yet he worked hard to make the most of them. Hop and the three workmen, after the death of Pock, commenced weeping and lamenting. Clover and cassia and myrrh were sent for and placed in a bowl, out of which no doubt Lee Chung had often eaten rice. Spices were laid over a layer of ashes and then set on fire, and candles were lighted and placed on a table beside the cot on which Lee Chung lay. The proverb of the Chinese is: "One living is a man, but dead is a spirit," and the spirit of Lee Chung was therefore considered fit to receive the odor of the incense; the light of the candles is supposed to light the annit. It Isn't So.—Mr. Margary, the Boston missionary to China, either intended to deceive or was basely mistaken when he wrote to a Boston paper that: "A kick and a few words in his own tongue telling him he is an ignorant boor will make a common Chinaman worship you." This item was copied into a Detroit paper, and after reading it a day or two ago a cigar-maker determined to try the experiment. He had a little grudge against Lung Sing, that excellent Woodward avenue washerman, and he laid for him. L. S. was passing Duffiield's Church, a bundle under his arm, when the cigar maker got in three or four two-mule kicks on him, at the same time addressing the Celestia on the subject of his ignorance. Men on the opposite side of the street saw the affair, but by the time they had crossed the street the cigar maker had been doubled up against the iron fence, his nose was bleeding, his lip cut, and he seemed to be suffering with a broken back, while the Chinaman, fresh as a daisy, called out:
