If all that was contemplated in Mr. Robitaille's resolution cannot be secured at an early day, no time should be lost in the furnishing of a part of it, and it is quite certain that no expenditure on templated would be of more service, in proportion to the amount required, than that for the telegraphic communication required.

It is somewhat singular that the Gulf River, which up to the time of Confederation had been comparatively ne-glected, so far as lighthouses, fog signals and other guides for mariners were con-cerned—should still remain without a telegraphic System, when it is the aim of Canadicas to make it the entrance to the highway of the Western grain trade to Europe, and when it is visited every tonnage in the merchant navies of the tonnage in the merchant navies of the world.
