

UNB students can get credit in France

UNB students may once again receive UNB credit for courses they pass in France. The Université canadienne en France is recognized by UNB as offering courses valid for credit towards some UNB degrees.

The Université canadienne en France is located at Villefranche-sur-Mer, near Nice, on France's Mediterranean coast. It opened its doors on September 17 this year, and is offering courses in English, History, Philosophy, Classics, Music and some other subjects. Courses will be given, some in English and some in French, and will cater for students who are natively anglophone, natively francophone, or bilingual. Native anglophones will require to take at least one course in French, while native francophones will require to take at least one course in English.

The Université canadienne en France is residential. The campus provides accommodation for 150 students in small self-contained units, each housing eight students. Each unit has four double rooms and a kitchen. There is also a

As well as the academic instruction, there will be an extensive cultural program. The details of the program for 1988-89 are not yet known, but the 1987-88 program is scheduled to include visits to the historic towns of southern France, a bicycling tour of northern Italy, a trip to Paris, and other cultural and social events.

The Canadian representative of the Université canadienne en France, Mr. Jake Leishman, will be visiting UNB's Fredericton campus on Thursday, 29 October 1987. He will give a talk on the Université canadienne en France in Carleton Hall, room 106, at 11:30 and again at 2:30. His talk will be accompanied by slides. Information about the Université may also be obtained from Dr. A. M. Kinloch, of the department of English. Dr. Kinloch's telephone numbers are (office) 453-4676 and (home) 459-3631. Dr. Kinloch will take telephone calls up till 10:30 at night.

Adults in school

Any adult who has given one or more passing thoughts to going to university but hasn't taken the step yet, should plan on attending a session at UNB on Monday evening, October 26.

Mature learners who have taken the step and returned to university will meet with prospective students at 7:30 p.m. in the University Club on the top floor of the Old Arts Building. Members of UNB's department of extension and summer session and of CAMPUS, the organization for full and part-time adult students, will discuss the experience of returning to university and answer questions about opportunities for continuing their education. Arrangements can be made that evening to attend courses during the week.

"Mature students have special joy in learning—we're differently motivated," says Judith Grant of CAMPUS. "It's one of the best things I've ever done, and a lot of mature students say the same thing."

More than 35 per cent of the students at UNB last year were 24 years of age or over, Ms. Grant explained. "You're not alone."

This student-for-a-day event is a National Universities' Week activity. More information is available from Judith Potter, co-ordinator of UNB's adult learner services at 453-4646.
