

1989/90 marks another season of the Creative Arts, a committee promoting cultural life on campus. It consists of various ballets, operas and classical musicians playing throughout the year at reasonable student rates. These shows, run since 1969, are planned and booked by a committee of forty members who meet two or three times a year to discuss the performers. They also promote other branches of the fine arts on campus including the Bicentennial Choir and talent shows for university students. Professor Ronald Lees, a member of the organization says that most of the major artists in Canada have performed here at one time, some even before they became popular. There is a lot of participation among the students, although in the future, Lees hopes to see a bigger turn-out for the classical music shows. This year promises to be a great season, offering THE MARRIAGE OF FIGERO by The Canadian Opera Company, Loreena McKennett with Celtic song and harp, and Piccinni and Haifliger on the flute and piano just to name a few.
