JAMES STEWART.

November 24, 1909.

Dear Sir:

With reference to yours of the 18th inst., I beg to say that in my opinion the Industrial Disputes Act as it stands is a fairly good law though doubtless minor changes might be necessary to adapt it to the different conditions of another country or state.

It is doubtful as to whether it would succeed in all employments as it is difficult to interest public opinion in minor disputes which do not affect public interests or safety.

Will be pleased to give you any information in my power.

Yours very truly,
