There is this to be borne in mind in these days when so many young men are giving so much attention to physical development, in gymnastic and athletic exercises, that there cannot be permanent muscular strength where there is not blood strength. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives blood strength, promotes digestion and assimilation, and builds up the whole system.

THE ISLE OF MALTA

IT IS ONE OF THE BULWARKS OF THE BRITISH STRENGTH.

n of the Constitution of 1887 Gives the Italians Less Power in the Civil Government of the Island-Measure Forced by the Unreasonable Italian Politicians, Who Wanted Their Language Made Official.

The Italian politicians of Malta, by reason of their chafing under the British yoke, have done their best to bring Great Britain to the step recently taken by her, namely, the revocation of the constitution of 1887; and now the majority in the Legislature will be appointed by the British, and the power of the Italians will be considerably lessened.

One of the pet beliefs of the dominant Italians has been that the Italian language should be forced up-on all that reside in Malta; and to this, reasonable objection has been on all that reside in Malta; and to this, reasonable objection has been made by the English, as was to be expected; by both the resident Eng-lish and the English Government. The language spoken by a majority of the inhabitants of Malta is a Malteste perois and as discontinuous. of the inhabitants of maita is a Malteste patois, and as for real Italian speaking folk they are to those that make use of the English tongue only as one to two. But the Italians, in spite of their few numbers, have her control of divine and the control of their few numbers, have had control of affairs, and it certainly will go hard with them to lost that control.

A certain writer speaks of Malta as "one of the bulwarks of England's strength; with Gibraltar and Port Said, the key te the Mediterranean." This wee "bulwark" lies 56 miles south of Sicily. Including the lesser islands of Gozo and Comino, it has an area of 117 square miles, and a population, including the British garrison of over 12,000, of about 189,000. The island of Malta itself probably has not over 158,000 inhabitants. Valetta, the

A man who keeps his stomach sound by the use of "Golden Medical Discovery" will wear the crown of gray hairs as befits a monarch, with dignity and ease. original capatal of malta, Citta vecchia, is an old town of much interest, and still of considerable size. Its wide streets, brilliantly-painted houses, and girdling ramparts, give it an air of picturesque strength that appeals at once to the visitor to this city em a hill-top.

Malta is the chief naval station in the Mediterranean. The executive power of the island is in the hands tive council; finance and local matters are in the control of a legislative council consisting of six official and 13 elected members, with the governor having the right to veto. The present governor of Malta is Maj. Gen. Sir Francis Grenfall, a fine type of British officer. The English, unfortunately, are not very popular in Malta; the feeling against them became very bitter when Great Britain some time ago decided to substitute English for the official language, although it is thought the feeling was largely the result of work of the politicians, they doing everything to stir up the people, who otherwise might have submitted to the gradual changes planned by the English. But the stirring-up was effective; at the time King Edward's subjects generally were taking part in the coronation rejoicings, the natives of Malta refused to join in, their council declaring it was more of an occasion for tears than mirth, which showed the state of feeling, and perhaps suggested to England the time was about ripe for her to demonstrate that Malta really was one of her possessions.

And in 1902, Mr. Chamberlain warned the Maltese politicians that they be more careful in the future than they had been in the immediate past about vetoing taxes and expenditures for the garrison and fortress. The council has not heeded these words and, as a result, the constitution has been revoked.

Empress Eugenie was never really popular with the French, not even during the first years of the second empire, before she began to meddle with affairs of state, and in many incisive ways the Parisians heaped ridicule upon her. A curious little pamphlet with text and illustrations about the new empress was sold in Parts at the time of her marriage. This pamphlet was eatirely complimentary and harmless. The bitting humor of it was on the title page, which the venders went about crying in the streets, "The portrait and virtues of the Empress, all for 2 sous!" "MAKING CONVERTS" by leaps and bounds

A Lunatic Who Eats no Lunch.

A recent article in a Philadelphia periodical discusses at length the personality of George W. Perkins, the partner of J. Pierpont Morgan. Mr. Perkins, who is a comparatively young man—forty years of age—was selected for this exigent position by Pierpont Morgan for his great ability—physical as well as mental ability. His biographer says:

"He is just under six feet, powerful, takes much outdoor exercise, and eafs."

"He is just under six feet, powerful, takes much outdoor exercise, and eats great deal of dinner. But he is not one of those madmen who in the middle of the day fill themselves with food which prevents their brains from acting and which the struggling brain prevents the stomach from digesting."

That a business man should abstain from "filling himself with food" at midday is indeed unusual. The belief that we all need three solid meels a day dies hard. "Food and Feeding," by Sir Henry Thompson, one of the great physicians of England, has for years been a standard on dieteties. It has gone through many editions. It is written on the generous English plan, for in England they seem to get away with larger quantities of beef and beer than the average man can assimilate. In Merry England, the traditional three meals a day are often supplemented by a hearty buncheon called "two o'clock tea." and a late supper as well. Contemplating these gastronomic feats of his British brother, the gaunt American can only regard him with unervious admiration." British freely advocated "moderation." British "moderation" seems to mean feeding not "SCHEDULE A." Henry advocated "moderation." British "moderation" seems to mean feeding not more than four times a day, and not eating more than four courses for each meal. But with the flight of years, Sir Henry has modified his ideas. He no longer considers it wise for a man to fill himself full up to his n ck. In the latest edition of his book he admits that a man may struggle along on three meals a day, instead of five, and still retain his health. This is a distinct concession.

Medial writers say that a well-known English physician took as his sole nutri-ment, during the last sixteen years of his life, three pints of milk daily. Yes on this diet he not only sustained life, but was able to perform all the duties of his arduous profession.

How suicidal this would seem to the average business rian in this country.
says the "Argonaut." That gentlemar rises in the morning; he eats either mush and milk," or porridge of som kind concocted of the new breakfast cereals, with thick, clotted cream; he follows this with a couple of eggs, boile or poached, with ham or bacon; if he is really hungry, he may, perhaps, take a couple of chops; he will follow with s large cup of coffee, and top off with some buckwheat cakes a d maple syrup. He goes to his office and spends a busy forenoon; at one o'clock he goes to his club or his favorite restaurant, and takes a "light lunch"; it probably includes soup, a bit of fish, an entree, and perhaps a slice of the joint; he may take a vegetable or a salad, and perhaps some dessert—say, a pudding or an ica.

perhaps a slice of the joint; he may take a vegetable or a salad, and perhaps some dessert—say, a pudding or an ice. In the Eastern States, if he lives in the Great Pie Belt, he finishes his lunch with pie. In the darker parts of the New England Pie Zone, pie is eaten for breakfast.

With this mysterious mass of viands under his belt, the business man goes back to his office and endeavors to labor. But mental labor is difficult when so much digestive labor is thrown upon his organs. He returns to his home at nightfall with a partially digested luncheon, and there partakes of a heavy dinner. Dinner is the meal of the day. If he is a prosperous person, it will consist of at least soup, fish, entree, vegetables, joint, and dessert. He may take a little red wine with his dinner, and if he and his wife have an anniversary or a birthday, he will add to it a little champagne. Then he retires to his couch, and has bad dreams. He wonders why.

Pierpont Morgan's partner, who skips

his couch, and has bad dreams. He wonders why.

Pierpont Morgan's partner, who skips
luncheon in the middle of the day, would doubtless be looked upon with horror by most business men. If the average business man confined his uncelcon to a glass of milk and a biscuit, his partner would ask him if he was "not feeling well," while his wife, if she knew it, would grow seriously alarmed, and send for the doctor. So the business man on this continent goes on eating three square meals a day, and digging his grave with his teeth.
