gether inadquate, and has left them with improverished blood and tuberculous lungs.

After taking into account all the influence of heredity, which is made much of in treating of the causes of phthisis, insufficient nourishment is responsible alike, in most instances, for the deposit of inflammation and tubercle to which it naturally gives rise. There are many men, who, by a change of living, render tubercles deposited in their lungs harmless. Vitative becomes so high in its power that it dominates the evil influences, and they live out a fairly long life with enemies in their lungs that are rendered powerless by the strength of the fluid that fights them. We have seen consumption cured again and again by the simple process of building up the forces of vitality of through passive exercise in the open air, and the supply of abundance of good food; and we have no doubt that it be prevented in most instances by the same means.

No human body can long endure the draft made upon it by a cold climate and by constant labor, unless it is well fed, well clothed and well housed. Somewhere deterioration will show itself, and in New England—nay, all over the Kingdom of Great Britain it is the same, where the people are worse fed than here,—the rend of poverty of blood shows itself in the proventy of blood shows its
