A SAGACIOUS DELIVERER.

It was a hot July afternoon, and Ethel Manwaring was riding slowly along a quiet road on a fine chestnut mare, when she observed a solitary figure some distance ahead. It was that of a man, apparently young from the stary swing of the tall, straight body. By his side trotted a dog.

Quite an ordinary occurrence to see a man and a dog in a Sussex lane, and yet—well, at any rate, she observed him with more than a passing interest. As she drew alongside the man looked round, and she saw a handsome, sunburnt face, out of which looked a pair of laughing brown eyes that widened with sudden admiration as they encountered hers.

Somewhat to her annoyance, Ethel felt that, for no apparent reason, she was blushing furiously. Whereupon, giving the mare a flick with her riding-crop, she passed on more quickly.

But what could be the matter with her? she asked herself. Her heart was beating with a wild something that was not exactly joy, nor was it pain. Her whole body glowed and tingled with a new sensation, which though baffling analysis, was at the same time exquisitely sweet. The world, too, seemed to have suddenly undergone a change. It seemed different; there was more in it now.

"What a lovely girl!" was the man's mental comment. "I wonder who she is? If only I might speak to her! Confound conversation!"

"Now, if I, in my capacity as a story-writer, had devised this meeting," he went on, musingly, "something would have happened to bring about an introduction. As it is—

But, hang it! I can't let her slip out of my life just as she flitted into it." He removed his hat, and ran his fingers through his abundant hair. "Now, let me think. The heroine and the hero meet as strangers in a country lane; accessories, a horse and a dog. The heroine looks at the hero blushing and passes on. Obviously, she can do no more. It remains, then, for the hero to act. Well, now—

By Jove, I have it!" He whistled softly, and the dog who had strayed across the road, ambled at his side. It was a bulldog—large, massive of frame, and not a whit less repulsive of feature than the ordinary run of his species.

Could Not Digest His Food

Suffered for Years From Indigestion Until Cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. J. D. S. Barrett. If you suffer from chronic indigestion, forget about the stomach and pay attention to the condition of the liver and bowels. Ten to one that is where the real trouble lies. The liver gets sluggish and fails to filter the bile from the blood, the bowels become constipated and the whole digestive system is upset. As to cure, you cannot do better than to read of Mr. Barrett's experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. There is no treatment so prompt and thoroughly effective. Mr. J. D. S. Barrett, Nelson, B. C., and formerly of Twillingate, Nfld., writes:—"For several years I was a great sufferer from indigestion. The least bit of food caused me considerable trouble and often I could scarcely eat a meal a day. The many remedies I tried proved futile until in 1908 I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and after using about eight boxes I was completely cured. Since that time I have not been troubled with indigestion, which I consider a great blessing." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers or Edmondson Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

"Fetch it!" commanded the young man, pointing with his finger.

Without a sound the well-trained animal darted forward, and a moment later was jumping up at the nose of Ethel's horse.

The chestnut, unused to such attentions, reared and plunged, so that it required all the rider's skill to avoid being unseated.

"Beppo! Beppo! Down!" cried a voice, and the young fellow came up at a run. What appeared to be a smart cut from a stick he was carrying fell upon the dog's hide, and the animal cowered down behind him. But, in reality the blow was only a trivial affair, and was followed by an approving glance which Ethel did not observe.

"I am sorry my dog so far forgot himself as to molest you," said the young man. "It is seldom I have cause to reprimand him."

"It may have been the heat," she replied. "These are the 'Dog Days,' you know. But there is no harm done."

"If there had been, I should never have forgiven myself," he responded earnestly. And she blushed anew under his ardent gaze.

Mr. Manwaring looking up at his laughter entered the study after her, and surprised in so doing an expression on her face which he had certainly never seen there before.

"O daddy, dear," she began, excitedly. "I have made a new acquaintance."

"Indeed, my child; and who is she?" "It isn't a 'she' at all, but a 'he', and, oh, I know you will like him! He is very handsome, and big, and kind, and quite different from any man I've ever met. And I—

"daddy!" Her tears burst forth like a flood and although she herself could not have told why, her father could, and his heart sank. For he knew that love unmistakable had come into the life of his treasure. Dropping her head on his breast, she wept unreasonably for some moments; and afterwards, bit by bit, the story of the momentous meeting was told.

"And before he went, he gave me his card, and begged permission to call. I assured him it was unnecessary; but he said he never liked to leave anything to chance."

Mr. Manwaring took the card, and read thereon: "Guy Westland."

"I see he's staying with the 'Garlands,'" he commented.

"Yes; he wrote their address on the back."

"Ah, well, I must see what I think of him when he calls. But, and here he gave his daughter a searching look, "what about Mark Bellingham?"

Mary Bellingham was a young engineer and inventor, who frequently visited the house. Mr. Manwaring was interested in his work and aims.

"Mr. Bellingham is nothing to me, daddy."

"Ah! But I've an idea that you are a good deal to him. Still, I've no doubt Bellingham will take the matter philosophically."

As he had promised, the young man called on the following day, and Mr. Manwaring was afforded an opportunity of studying him. The impression the elder man received was distinctly favourable.

black, heavy-browed eyes. Apart from that, his manner was polite enough; but somehow the girl experienced a vague sense of uneasiness.

II.

The summer days came and went, bringing in their train the usual number of garden parties and similar festivities, and, incidentally affording Guy and Ethel many opportunities of seeing each other, of which they made good use. As yet the man had not spoken, fearing, if the truth be told, to venture his present happiness on the hazard of the momentous question. Ethel's mother divined the reason of the delay; but she was on tenterhooks lest she should get an avowal from Bellingham first.

And this, in point of fact, was what happened. At her third garden party Bellingham arrived early, and persistently monopolised her attention. She listened, as only your true hostess can listen, to conversation which had no charm for her; but at last, she interrupted her companion's flow of talk, and made as if to go.

"I really must ask you to excuse me now," she said, hurriedly. "There are several rather important things I have to see to."

"And what I have to say to you is also important—of the utmost importance to me!" he replied, in an insinuating manner.

They were standing in an unfrequented corner, screened from the general view by a laurel hedge.

"I want to tell you that I love you," went on the man, in a hot, hungry tone. "I have loved you ever since I first saw you, and my love has grown until it is now the dominant passion of my being. Ethel, I love you, and I want you for my wife!"

The girl paled at this unexpected outburst, and drew back. Little given to "nerves" as she was, his vehemence frightened her.

"Mr. Bellingham," she said, quickly. "I entreat you not to go on. What you ask is impossible. I could not give you the love you would expect from a wife."

"In time you could. Consider—consider before you wreck a man's life and happiness. I can wait. Let me come to you in a month—six months—and then—"

"Please, please, don't!" cried the girl, distressfully. "You hurt me! I am deeply sorry, and will always be your friend. More than that I can never be."

Up to then Mark Bellingham was as good a man as most; but, seeing the firm look of resolve in the girl's eyes, all the meanness of his nature rushed to the surface like a relentless wave. He seized her slender wrist as in a vice.

"I see how it is!" he cried. "I am forestalled. You imagine yourself in love with that scamp Westland! A

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

How Mrs. Reed of Peoria, Ill., Escaped The Surgeon's Knife.

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. Fortwo years I suffered. The doctor said I had a tumor and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a well and healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. I am glad to tell anyone what your medicines have done for me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Mrs. Lynch Also Avoided Operation.

Jessup, Pa.—"After the birth of my fourth child, I had severe organic inflammation. I would have such terrible pains that it did not seem as though I could stand it. This kept up for three long months, until two doctors decided that an operation was needed.

"Then one of my friends recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after taking it for two months I was a well woman."—Mrs. JOSEPH A. LYNCH, Jessup, Pa.

Women who suffer from female ills should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one of the most successful remedies the world has ever known, before submitting to a surgical operation.

pretty sort of choice, truly. Shall I tell you what sort of life he leads?"

The girl's blue eyes blazed with indignation—through the tears induced by the man's rough grip on her arm.

"Mr. Bellingham, how dare you? Mr. Westland is—"

"Here!" exclaimed a deep voice, and a strong masculine hand fell upon the engineer's shoulder, sending him staggering some yards away.

Bellingham recovered his balance, and stood glaring upon the pair.

"Well?" said Guy, returning his angry gaze with interest. "I am awaiting for your apology, both to Miss Manwaring and myself."

The other did not reply; but doubling his fists, rushed furiously upon his rival. There was a quick interchange of blows; but the termination of the conflict came when, from a heavy right-hander on the cheek, Bellingham dropped to the turf half-stunned.

When at last he picked himself up, with his hand to his aching cheek, he observed two figures receding in the distance. Their attitude was eloquent beyond words. At sight of them the bruised visage of the baffled engineer became convulsed with rage, and he shook his fist impotently in the air.

"You bound, you shall pay for this!" he muttered. "And you, too, my beauty! It shall be brains against brute strength from now—and we shall see who will win!"
