Divorced Life

By Helen Hesong Fuesle

Luck on a Rainy Evening

Marian glanced at the little time-piece on her dresser and sighed. Only 7 o'clock, and her little room looked dismal and cheerless as when she left it to go down to dinner. The prospect of a long, dreary, lonely evening stretched ahead of her. The few novels she had brought to New York she had read and re-read.

As for letter writing as a mode of spending the evening, she shrank from writing to any of her friends or her brother. She would be too strongly tempted to ask further financial assistance. "I suppose I might as well go to bed," she mused. "Perhaps I might play Little Nemo, and dream something interesting. Anyhow, I can't endure sitting here and thinking!"

She began busying herself with her books, pins and clasps which looked her into her garments. When almost ready to retire she was startled by a knock at her door. "Who's there?" she called.

"Miss Ella Barker," came the answer. "May I not see you for a moment—that is, if you're not dressing to go out?"

Marian hurried into her dressing-gown and opened the door. "Dressing to go out?" she repeated with a smile. "Quite the contrary. I was just getting ready to retire. Won't you step in?"

"Retire!" echoed Miss Barker, her dark eyes holding a combined look of surprise and pity. "Goodness, girl, retire at seven? This is New York. Why, even in Boston we sit up until ten."

"Well, I felt that I couldn't read or amuse myself in any other way," explained Marian, somewhat embarrassed. "So I thought I'd try to find solace in sleep."

"Well, if that's the case," interrupted the other, "hurry into your clothes again and join Bert and me for the theatre. We have tickets for three, and my sister has decided not to go. She's been shopping all day and feels a perfect wreck. The taxi will be here in twenty minutes. Will you meet us in the parlor, as I believe Mrs. Kern calls it?"

Marian tried to protest against the other's kindness and thought of her, but Miss Barker broke in with: "I'm not going to give you a chance to say no. So hurry."

Left alone, Marian began flying into her clothes. "That must have been thought transference," she mused happily, "or else God took pity on anyone who had to go to bed at seven in New York."

Her cheeks burned with the excitement of an evening at the theatre with her new-found friends. Again Bert Barker's dark and merry eyes began hovering before her mental vision. She got into her most becoming frock. She caught a glimpse of her face in her mirror and marveled that she could be so happy after her desperate attack of loneliness. A taxi snorted in the street below. She seized her coat and gloves, and started for the parlor.

"So good of you to come, Miss Winthrop," said Barker enthusiastically. "I'm glad you're not going to mind a little bad weather."

Marian felt herself transformed by the happy excitement of this unexpected event. She seemed lost in a daze of satisfaction at the swift turn of luck. She could hardly realize how her books and clasps had found their places so swiftly. She felt that in little more than a twinkling she had transformed herself into a veritable Cinderella.

The three descended to the waiting vehicle. The throttle clicked, the engine barked and the machine hummed fleetly off into the night.

"Do you know, I sometimes find a rainy day most fascinating," Marian murmured contentedly.

Tomorrow—Marian on Broadway.

Marian's cheeks burned with excitement of meeting new friends.

The House of Lords concluded today the Committee stage of the Amending Bill. LONDON, July 9.
The criminal prosecution of Sir Thomas Lipton, chairman, and his co-directors in Lipton's, Limited, was suggested by Sir Arthur Markham (Liberal), in a question addressed to the Attorney General in to-day's Parliamentary papers. The question the putting of which was postponed by arrangement, asks whether in view of the defendants in the Army and Navy Canteen scandal case were acting upon a system which was encouraged by the directorate of the Company, the Attorney General has laid the case before the Public Prosecutor with a view to criminal proceedings for fraud and bribery against Lipton and his co-directors. The question arose out of the recent conviction of nine army officers and eight civilians, employees of Lipton's, Limited, on charges of receiving and giving bribes to influence the allotment of supply contracts for the Army canteens.

BELFAST, July 9.
The first meeting, since it was formed, of Ulster's Provisional Government, has been called for to-morrow at the request of Sir Edward Carson. According to Capt. James Craig, the result of the meeting will have an important bearing on the Irish situation, but he declares there is no intention on the part of Ulsterites, whatever happens, to set up a parliament for themselves in Ulster.

They claim the right merely to hold the province in trust for the constitution of the United Kingdom, in order that Ulster should continue to be an integral part of the British Empire. Clauses of the Constitution of the Provisional Government, which up to now have not been disclosed, expressly provide that: "Upon the restoration of direct Imperial Government the Provisional Government shall cease to exist;" and, "The Provisional Government while it is in power shall maintain and enforce all statute laws now in force in Ireland, other than the statute establishing Home Rule Government." Arrangements have been made to receive Sir Edward Carson, on his arrival to-morrow. Four hundred Ulster Volunteers, armed with rifles and fixed bayonets, will escort him to the place of meeting.

MINARD'S LINIMENT USED BY PHYSICIANS.

Jake Daubert.

Red McGhee says: For all-round value Jake's, a bird. For some years now the fans have heard his praises loudly sung. He's climbed Fame's ladder pretty high and he'll dispute with any guy the right to that top rung.

Rucker's old left arm and Jake have worked in harmony to make the Brooklyn team show class. An' Jake has done the heavy part—he's made first basing quite an art. His mem'ry won't soon pass.

He's won one Chalmers' trophy car for bein' leadin' all-round star—he opined that bus last year. Such honors don't turn Jake's head, he just keeps pluggin' right ahead to polish his career. He sets a weird and fancy pace at fieldin' round that 'nitial base—his lank form seems all wire. He cheers the pitcher all the way—just oozes ginger out all day an' never tires.

He's some club swinger, too, this boy. His wallopers are a lastin' joy to any reglar fan. He's strong on extra cushion drives an' stands out in the dope archives a sure 300 man.

Fat Robbie's of Superba nine would likely hit the greased incline without our ol' friend Jake. At any rate the oil turnstiles would click lots less.

An' Robbie's smiles a fond farewell would take.

Tourists at the Nickel

Delighted With It.
Yesterday the Nickel Theatre was the popular resort for old and young, and young and all were charmed with the whole performance.

The Nickel is now a household word. It has become popular because it is clean and comfortable, well ventilated and aired, while the pictures are the best obtainable in the British and American markets. Then, too, the operators know their business thoroughly and the pictures are always bright and flickerless.

Last night the hall was well filled, many tourists from the Stephano were present and spent a most enjoyable hour. They were loud in their praises of the Nickel, saying that the pictures were as good as any seen in America. This is flattering indeed to our popular house of amusement. The manager has arranged another clever entertainment for this evening, and all should make an effort to attend. The feature film is alone worth the entrance fee. For the children's matinee to-morrow there will be an extra reel of film of the greatest interest to the children.

Monday there will be a big war story. It is in three reels, and is entitled "Shenandoah." This will prove a delightful entertainment and patrons should not fail to see it.

Readers of the Great Harry Thaw Case should further satisfy their curiosity by at once getting Evelyn Thaw's "Story of My Life." The extraordinary advance orders have induced the publishers to offer it at only 30c. GARLAND'S Bookstores.
