Britain's Mighty Monitors in the Dardanelles.

Thousands of Eyes Riveted on Craft on Entering Kephelos Harbor—Can Thow Nearly a Ton of Metal Fifteen Miles.

London, Oct. 20.—Ashmead Bartlett, in a despatch dated Dardanelles, Sept. 26, published in the Daily Chronicle, describes the new monitors employed by the British. He says:

One afternoon there appeared at the entrance of Kephelos harbor an amazing looking object. She could hardly be said to steam up but rather wobbled into port like a huge goose primed for Michaelmas. It is impossible to tell at a distance whether she was broadside on or showing her bows or her stern, for she seemed to be quite round. Her high sides held aloft an absolutely flat deck on which nothing showed except an enormous turret from which projected two guns of enormous girth and length, whilst rising from her center like a giant of some Californian forest was a huge striped tripod bearing aloft a kind of oblong jewel box, an exact replica on a huge scale of that in which the Dalai Lama bears about with him the ashes of his first embodiment.

With very difficult steering, she made her way through the crowded harbor and dropped anchor with the eyes of thousands riveted on her. No one had ever seen the like of her before. Sensation in fact followed sensation. Her crew began to bathe apparently. All possessed the supernatural power of walking on the water, for on descending the ladder instead of plunging into waves they walked along them by the side of her, and, having thus distributed themselves proceeded to dive in, only to climb out again a few minutes later at their will.

We set off in boats to investigate this strange phenomenon and found that just below the surface her sides bulged out some ten feet and then curved under, forming a platform just washed by the waves. This is the secret mystery of these craft. In that bulge a man has concentrated his ingenuity to defeat the submarine. If a torpedo strikes her side it will explode amidst a variety of substances which I must not mention, and the hull of the vessel will escape injury.

These huge monitors carry naught but two 14-inch guns and some anti-air craft armament. The first time one of these monitors went to the mouth of the Dardanelles to celebrate, she gave the poor old Turk a horrid shock of surprise. Her guns go off with a terrible roar and carry over three-quarters of a ton of metal fifteen miles. Later on three more of these monsters arrived, giving us eight 14-inch guns with which to bombard the enemy's position, in addition to large numbers of smaller monitors of all shapes and sizes, some with names and some without, but each armed with the very latest weapons of precision.

Hot Water & Its Ways

Most housewives know that sugar will dissolve far more quickly in hot water than in cold, but very few know that salt will dissolve in cold water just as quickly as when the water is boiling. In this, salt is somewhat of an exception, for most substances dissolve much more easily when water is hot. Heat is nothing more nor less than an increase in the speed with which the molecules are revolving.

As dissolving, a piece of sugar means that the sugar enters into the tiny spaces between the molecules of the water, the more quickly they are moving, the easier it is for the sugar to get in. For, it must be remembered, you can fill a glass to a certain level, and after that put in two, three or even four lumps of sugar, and the glass will be no fuller than before.

The reason for this is shown by merely thinking of the process on a larger scale. Suppose a bowl were filled full of marbles. You could pour a lot of shot into it without making the marbles rise any higher in the bowl. The shot would be filling in all the little cracks between the marbles. And if you stirred the marbles slowly, the shot would little by little find its place.

That is like the sugar in cold water. But if the marbles were whirled around swiftly, the shot would rapidly fill every place and the bowl would be full of shot. Yet the marbles would not be any higher in the bowl. Then, after all that, you could pour water into the bowl and it would get into the smaller spaces between the round shot, and still the marbles would not be any higher in the bowl. It is in this way that substances which have been dissolved find their way into the liquids into which they have been dissolved.
