Can't Both Sides Win?

By RUTH CAMERON.

"No man with a man's heart in him gets far on his way without some bitter, soul-searching disappointment. Happy he who is brave enough to push on to another stage of the journey and rest where there are living springs of water and three-score and ten p a l m s." —

"I know what campaigning is. I'm sorry both sides can't win, for both have made a valiant fight."

In a state in which the suffrage amendment was defeated, an anti-suffrage worker made that sportsmanlike statement.

Don't you honor her for the fine forbearance that kept her from crowing over the vanquished (a forbearance some of the leaders did not show), and don't you join with her in the regret that both sides couldn't win—then and always?

She Won't Give Prizes.

She made me think of a friend of mine who refuses to give prizes at her bridge parties. Instead she gives dainty favors to each player. "You see," she says, "someone has to win and someone else—perhaps two or three people—have to be bitterly disappointed. I hate that, so I can't bear to have a prize."

A college professor whom I used to know discontinued the contests which had been a part of his course because he couldn't bear to have the defeated suffer disappointment when they had worked so hard.

I Can't Bear to See a Child or Old

Person Disappointed.
Disappointment is indeed a cruel thing. I hate to see anyone suffer it, and I simply can't bear to see a child or an old person disappointed. But, after all, what is the use of eliminating and shunning contests when life itself is made of up contests.

Walk down the street: you see a successful shop. You admire its tasteful window display, its air of prosperity; you like to avail yourself of its attractive stock. You are admiring the winner in a contest for trade—the inevitable, eternal contest that goes on day by day and hour by hour.

Even suppose that Socialism, with its blessed promise of the elimination of industrial competition, should some day come true. Would there not always be other competitions of one sort or another? Two men for instance, love the same woman. Both can't win her.

Don't Forget the Contest With Yourself.

Contests and competitions are part of the warp and woof of life. Nevertheless it is possible to give them too great a power over one. We need to remember that the competition with ourselves is just as important as the competition with others.

In other words, if we thought more of the game and less of the prize, life would hold fewer disappointments for us. Both sides could not win the prize, but both could have the supreme satisfaction of having played the game squarely and to the best of their ability. And isn't that satisfaction one of the few real realities of life?

Last Night's Lecture.

An interesting lecture was given at the club rooms of the Benevolent

Irish Society last night by Mr. John

G. Higgins, B.A., who took as his subject: "Daniel O'Connell as a Lawyer." Mr. J. C. Pippy, who presided, introduced the lecturer, who for upwards of an hour held the closest attention of his listeners. At the conclusion a hearty vote of thanks moved by Messrs. J. S. Keating and J. P.

Scott, was unanimously accorded Mr.

Higgins. It was announced that on next Thursday evening Mr. P. K. Devine would lecture on "St. John's 100

Years Ago."

Germany's Punishment

Last month we reprinted Dr. Dillon's suggestions that the Allies should form a Customs Union designed to suppress German commerce, and in the current issue of The English Review Mr. Hyndman submits the proposed "Financial Boycotts and Policies" to a general criticism. It is pointed out that the success of such a scheme depends upon "the power of the Allies to dominate ocean traffic," and this implies a threat to neutral countries. The critic continues:—

"The object of the Union is to prevent the Germanic Powers from using their wonderful powers of organization and scientific efficiency to check the development and override the interests of the combined nations during the years which they devote to the improvement of their own industries. But to turn this temporary expedient into a policy of permanent exclusion of the productions of a most important portion of the human race—itsself, as we may hope, developing in the direction of complete democracy and social progress—would be a most foolish and injurious form of reaction. Bitter as we must all feel towards the enemy of to-day, who is preparing, even in war, for a furious trade conflict in peace, the time will assuredly come when the memory of the crimes committed by the Teutonic Empires will fade, and commercial relations will be renewed with the new generation of Germans, as they were with the French after the great Napoleonic wars which extended over twenty years. International comity cannot be permanently suppressed, whatever national feeling, as well as national interest, may reasonably counsel for the time being."

Mr. Hyndman concludes, that the wiser course would be to learn the lesson of German efficiency:—

Unless we at once set to work so to re-order our national life that huge slum areas with the physical deterioration they engender are finally swept away; to establish a system of training, feeding, and clothing which shall ensure health and strength to all from childhood onwards; to put an end to the furious profiteering of competition which renders all social reform under capitalism illusory and futile in the long run; to regard all measures as beneficial only in so far as they increase the well-being of the whole community, and thus secure the fullest development, physical, mental, and moral of each individual; to bring our political forms into direct democratic harmony with our economic collectivism—unless we do all these things, and do them quickly and thoroughly, all the tariff regulations and Customs Unions in the world will not save our nation from anarchical revolution or possible final ruin."
