When the ambassador of Pyrrhus returned from the Roman senate to his master's camp, he reported that he had seen an assemblage of kings. and that that dearest, kindest and best of all the great litteratures of one century could see his Becky Sharp live and throb and speak and act as Mrs. Fiske makes her do upon the New York stage. This is the greatest adaptation of the age. It is Thackeray's "Becky" to the roots of her hair; and side by side fully parallel to Mrs. Fiske's great creation is a Major Rawdon street." Crawley that is as true to life and to the original as anything I have ever yet be-held. Maurice Barrymore should have held. Maurice Barrymore should have forged ahead to supreme rank on the American stage. He had the genius and the talent, but he lacked something, and he never did himself full justice. But his Rawnever did himself full justice heads. don Crawley is a grand achievement, a work of art, and a work of genius, and I predict immense success for this new Through ages past hath bred us, Through ag

James O'Neil is playing D'Artagnan in 'The Musketeers.'' For a time Blanche Bates played Miladi with him, and those The Frenchman with his slandars, who had the good fortune to see them together beheld a performance that no two artists on the American stage could surpass. O'Neil is a magnificent D'Artagnan. Nightly crowded houses are flocking to see Dumas' immortal creations live their gallant lives again, and enthrall the multi-tude by their schievements. tude by their achievements.

Henry Miller played another adaptation, a French Revolutionary drama. Henry Miller easily stands forth as one of America's great actors, and his play and his playing were exquisite, but it did not catch on; it did not suit the temper of the times we live in, and financially it was a failure.

W. H. Crane put on an exquisite colonial drama of the days when New York was Dutch—"Peter Stuyvesant." I would not have missed seeing that play for a horseback ride with my friend Gen. Warren over Oregon's mountains, but New York would not have Crane in "Peter Stuyvesant." New York loves Crane, but it always wants him York loves Crane, but it always wants him in some rollicking, laughing, jolly comedy. Through ages past hath led us, New Yorkers won't have Crane seriously. Dies of World-Famed Artists Now Billed at Several Leading Theatres.

New York, Dec. 14.—Greater New York is gayer New York now. I have neverseen the American metropolis to greater advantage than in the closing months of the century. It is in good sooth a century of marvels, but New York is the greatest Arvel of all. Venice in her halcyon days was nothing in comparison with New York. It's true there hangs around Venice the halo of romance, poetry, and song, and all her glories have been sung by poets and her beauties portrayed by painters incomparably superior to any that have ever set foot on American soil, yet it were better to see New York to day than to see Venice when she was the Queen City of the Adriatic, and the commercial emporium of the world.

The Boer Rifleman's Song.

"L.J.O.B.," has written what may be called justly the best poem that the war in South Africa has inspired yet. It is remarkable that this really excellent piece of work has not been circulated widely before this, especially since the British nation is hungry for good war peetry, of which it is not getting much, if any. This poem was printed in the relephone, a weekly paper published in Capetown, Africa, on September 25. The word "rool-baatje" used by the poet refers to the redouted British soldiers:

Lay my rifle here beside me, set my Bible on my breast,
For a moment let the waiting bugles cease;
As the century is closing, I am going to my rest,
Lord, lettest Thou Thy servant go in peace.
But loud through all the bugles rings a cadence in mine ear,
And on the winds my hopes of peace are stowed;
The winds that waft the voices that already I can hear—
Of the rool-baatje singing on the road.

Yes, the red-coats are returning; I can hear the steady tramp,
After twenty years of waiting, inlied to sleep,
Since rank and file at Potchefstroom we hemmed them in their camp,
And cut them up at Bronkerspruit like sheep.
They shelled us at Ingogo, but we galloped into range,
And we shot the British gunners where they showed;
I guessed they would return to us—I knew the chance must change—
Hark! the rool-baatje singing on the road!

But now from snow-swept Canada, from India's torrid plains,
. From lone Australian outposts, hither led;
Obeying their commando, as they heard the bugle's strains,
The men in brown have joined the men in red.
They come to pay us back the debt they owed;
And I hear new voices lifted, and I see strange colors tossed,
'Mid the rool-baatje singing on the road.

The old, old faiths must faiter; the old, old creeds must fail—
I hear it in that distant murmur low—
The old, old crder changes, and 'tis vain for us to rail;
The great world does not want us—we must go.
And veldt. and spruit, and kopje to the stranger will belong,
No more to trek before him we shall load;
Too well, too well I know it, for I hear it in the song

Mr. Plowman has secured several bonds on Kootenay properties, and will induce capitalists to take them up when he arrives in the metropolis; and in addition to these he is the owner of a claim near Kaslo, and has accepted favorable terms for the selling of the same to a strong company about to be incorporated to work it in conjunction with five or six more claims in the same group. This new group of claims is situated on the south fork of Kaslo creek, and it is said to be the intention of the company to commence operations at an early date and continue tention of the company to commence operations at an early date and continue work throughout the winter.
