

Mrs. O'Flanagan, wearing of donkey riding. The profit on her foragings rose to cent per cent, and she was daily expostulated with. In a day or two more the mouseline de laine descended again, and not a goose or duck cheered us with its pleasant cacklings. The eggs remained; and Vin de Tenedos—the juice of the vine—did duty for the juice of the apples. While the regiments were on parade, Mrs. O'Flanagan was wont to divest itinerant merchants of their supplies, and send them home rejoicing; so that on the men's return not a vestige of a Turk was to be seen; and all eggs, milk, onions, and etceteras, were only to be had at the store of the wily sutler. Then came a tug of war. Mrs. O'Flanagan was commanded to leave her tent, and yield up her donkey. She defied. The order was repeated, but she received it with smiles of decision, firmly seated among her eggs. This was too much. As a camp-follower, she was amenable to camp authority; and the matter ended by an officer being directed to burn her tent over her head. Mrs. O'Flanagan became a sort of Smit to her principles; though unlike the Hindoo widow, she yielded her confidence under the influence of green wood, and was very soon smoked out like a noisome insect, and remained seated under a neighboring bush, leaning her arm on a barrel of Vin de Tenedos, and lamenting her destiny in a pathetic Irish howl.

A LITTLE ROMANCE AT TCHIFLECK.—Mrs O'Flanagan, our contimere "with a difference," came into camp one evening in a state of immense excitement; and being speedily surrounded by gossips, stated that when washing at the river, she saw a number of female slaves at work in a vineyard, under the control of an ancient Turk, who was keeping the veiled helps to their duty after a manner so pathetically described by Mrs. Beecher Stowe. Mistress O'Flanagan stated that, upon strolling up to the scene of action under the influence of her usually inquiring mind, one of the flock addressed her in an intelligible way, stating herself to be an Irish girl, who as an infant had arrived in the port of Gallipoli with her parents, the father having commanded a small Liverpool trader. The father having died and being hospitably interred, the Turks had seized the wife and child as slaves; and, on the death of her mother, the girl had become the property of this terrible old vine-dresser. She was now eighteen, and had made several vain efforts to escape; for which independence, as Mrs. O'Flanagan averred, "she had been whipped horrible." Our informant added, that the white slave was "a sweet creature, with such a innocent young face!" and had besought her, Mistress O'Flanagan, to make her condition, known and procure her rescue. The tale spread, chivalry was in a blaze. At dawn the following morning the whole brigade, officers and men, on horse and foot, was scouring the hills. The quiet old vine-dresser came forth to his field as usual, but, alarmed by the hubbub, sought to retire and carry off his slaves. Our men were too fast for him. The women were surrounded. The soldiers, uncertain of the object of their adventure, pulled first at one veiled lady's garment and then at another's to ascertain which had the advantage of a Tipperary brogue. One replied in a series of little kicks, another struck out most vigorously, a third howled fearfully, but the fascinating voice of Erin's fair daughter was no where to be heard; and, after venting all the abuse permitted by the Koran to be heaped upon the heads of unbelievers, these soulless culturers of the old Lurk's fields shook off their yellow boots, and scrambled up among the cherry-trees, out of the reach of their chivalrous knights. This was vexatious. The exciting and mysterious seemed likely to be a complete failure; and of course, the injury done to the corps, and the insults offered in the cause of supposed innocence, reached the ears of the authorities at Gallipoli. The English Consul became fearfully irate; the General of the Division demanded explanations; the Pasha was taken from his colomet of peace, and asked with angry threats the meaning of it all. Evidences were called: the gossips of our camp, who went, and returned, much the worse for Vin de Tenedos, after having given very confused statements in a very contradictory manner; and the romance ended in a belief that the whole was a cunningly-devised scheme of Mistress O'Flanagan's to get those into trouble, who had smoked her out at Boulehar, and also to enable her to see Gallipoli without fatigue as she indeed eventually did, in a prison there. Poor Mistress O'Flanagan! we saw the direction in the order-book, that the officer on guard was to visit her three times during the day, and twice during the night, to assure himself of her safe custody; and, after due punishment, the lady was to be shipped for England, to make the best use she could of her natural genius for romance.—Our Camp in Turkey, and the way to it.

RELICS OF NAPOLEON AT THE LOUVRE.—See, here is the famous redingote gris—the gray greatcoat, made familiar to us by a thousand pictures and a thousand songs. I don't think, intrinsically, it would fetch more than half-a-dozen shillings. I am afraid Mr. Moses Hart, of Holywell-street, would not be disposed to give even that amount for it; yet here it is beyond price and purchase. It has held the body of the man whose name is blazoned on the ceiling; whose initial, pregnant with will and power, N, is on wall and escutcheon, on casque and murion, on vase and cup, on keystone and pediment, on coin and ring, on spoon and fork, on the step of the altar, the judge's bench, the footstool of the throne,—everywhere in this land. This common coat of coarse gray duffel hangs in the midst of velvet and silk, gold and silver embroidery, stern, calm, and impassable, and throws all their theatrical glories into shadow; even as the man who wore the coat made all the kings and emperors and princes that were his tools, his slaves, or his victims, look like common people beside him; as he sat in his box at the theatre at Erfurt throning it over a pitfull of kings; or causing the blood of a chamberlain of the Holy Roman Empire to run cold within him by beginning a story with "When I was a Lieutenant in the Regiment of Lafare." I would the Emperor's boots were here—those notable jack-boots which Ruffet and Charleto knew so well how to draw: "the boots which, muddy, dusty, worn, ruined, anxious, frowny at you moody and despairing, in Paul Delaroché's picture of "Napoleon at Fontainebleau." People talk of the Emperor's cocked hat; but the boots are far more characteristic of the man. Curiously they are associated with him in some of the most momentous phases of his career. The boot was pierced by a bullet at Bellinzona; and here Napoleon received his almost only wound. For the want of boots for his had no money to buy them—Napoleon Bonaparte could not go to the Indies. If those boots would have then been obtained—bought, borrowed, from Talma; wheedled from an unsuspecting tradesman—there would probably have been no 18th Brumaire, no Empire of France, no kingdom of Italy, no Russian campaign, no Austrian marriage, no Spanish ulcer, no Moscow, no Waterloo, no St. Helena. But not even with St. Helena ended the boots of Buonaparte. Twenty years after his death, when his grave under the willows was opened, and his coffin unscrewed, that his person might be verified by the King of France's son, who was come to take it home, the most note worthy appearances in the bier (after the features of that face which the fingers of death had not been able entirely to efface, nor the grave to vanquish) were the boots. The museum of second-hand Sovereigns is incomplete without the encasements of those feet of Hercules.—Dickens's Household Words.

The Quarterly Review thus describes the Scotch Protestant minister and a Scotch Protestant Kirk:—"The minister is no scholar, nor pretends to be.—Deeper read in his Bible than in divinity, he admits the excellence of Anglican theology without caring to study it. A friend to order, and with no priestly pretensions, he is for maintaining the establishment as it is, barring the heritors and the court of teinds.—Having made up his mind upon pre-acy as an undoubted invention of the enemy, he looks upon Episcopalianism as genteel Romanism—Popery-and-water. Liturgies he considers babes' food. Church history before John Knox is nought to him; but the written word is his study. What the cross was to early Christians, a text is to him; and he has a word for all occasions, in season and out of season. With his pocket Bible, he is 'the Christian armed,' and exhorts and 'improves' largely by the aid of the book. When Sabbath morning comes he has no old bureau-drawer to go to from which to take the two uppermost sermons; unless he is gifted with powers of preaching 'extempore' in fact as well as appearance, he has all the week been 'committing' his discourses and his prayers to boot. Thus his thoughts run upon his work through the week, though, like those of his congregation, too much centred on the sermon. His church, consequently, is a mere auditorium. He has no theory of Holy Places. The Lord has His Day in Scotland, but His House. It is man's house of preaching, not God's house of prayer."

WORMS! WORMS!

A great many learned treatises have been written, explaining the origin of, and classifying the worms generated in the human system. Scarcely any topic of medical science has elicited more acute observation and profound research; and yet physicians are very much divided in opinion on the subject. It must be admitted, however, that, after all, a mode of expelling these worms, and purifying the body from their presence, is of more value than the wisest disquisitions as to the origin. The expelling agent has at length been found—Dr. M'LANE'S Vermifuge is the much sought after specific, and has already superceded all other worm medicines, its efficacy being universally acknowledged by medical practitioners.

Purchasers will please be careful to ask for DR. M'LANE'S VERMIFUGE, and take none else. All others in comparison, are worthless. Dr. M'LANE'S genuine Vermifuge, also his Celebrated Liver Pills, can now be had at all respectable Drug Stores in the United States and Canada. W.M.
