to the Foreign Population," in which he pointed out the great danger of the church pauperizing the people by a multiplicity of charities and missions. There is no reason why, if the necessary initial impetus is given by the the work could not be done effectively as it was being done by city churches, and deprecated the small mission which. he said, helped to degrade and pauperize. He outlined a plan of dividing the city into large districts. The central organization should be interdenominational in characters and there should be tional in character, and there should be co-operation of all the churches. Each district should be under a superintendent, and there should be a general superintendent at the head of the united organization. Each district should have a well-equipped building with readingroom, gymnasium and every amuse-ment that tends to develop the body as
