

1. That the School Teacher is the most powerful auxiliary of the Missionary. Every mission, therefore, should be provided with school as well as church accommodations.
2. That money judiciously invested in this department of Church-work, especially at this time, will go very far to make our mission work permanent, and to make its progress more rapid. Canadian Methodism has undertaken no work more imperative and important than this. The mind must be educated as well as the heart; indeed, instruction must be as the basis of moral reform; the people must be led upward as well as onward. And unless we do this work now, while the Awakening Spirit is moving over "the valley of dry bones," a grand opportunity will have been forever lost.
3. That the education of these families recently emancipated from Romanism must be prosecuted under the watchful care and control of our Missionaries or the Church. Unless this education be religious, nurtured by the careful study of the Word of Life, and confirmed by the powerful influence of holy lives, nothing but unbelief in its manifold and baneful forms will be the result. Let us save, if possible, our French-Canadian fellow-citizens from the trend of their ancestors in Old France, where so much infidelity has been developed.
4. That while all agencies in the prosecution of our difficult work should be utilized to their fullest extent, we are convinced that our Mission Institute is one of the most powerful agencies in the field, and should, therefore, claim the most earnest prayer and most generous givings of all our friends

The field is open broadly before us. Men are in our ranks. Money is the need of the hour. We need money (1) to enlarge our accommodations; (2) to multiply our appliances; (3) to secure a larger corps of instructors,—thus far, all, except Prof. Cornu, have taught without a cent of remuneration;—and (4) to inaugurate a system of prizes, which, under proper regulations, would stimulate our students to a wholesome and laudable ambition. "COME AND HELP US."

LOUIS N. BEAUDRY, Principal.
