

WHY ITALY CAN'T PAY HER WAR DEBT

Prohibitive Tariffs and Restrictive Laws are Stumbling Blocks.

Philadelphia, Feb. 25.—Prohibitive tariffs against Italian goods and restrictive laws against Italian immigration are stumbling blocks in Italy's way toward the payment of her debt, resulting from the world war, Senator Vittorio Emanuele, Italian ambassador to the United States, declared Tuesday night in an address before the Philadelphia Rotary Club. If Italy cannot export her products to America and cannot send her citizens here, he said, she will never be able to pay her debt.

Those are the horns of an inevitable dilemma, said Ambassador Ricci. "If you wish to protect your agriculture, your industry and maintain your standard of wages at any cost, you must give up the idea of collecting your debt from Italy because your customs and immigration policies make it impossible for her to pay. If, on the contrary, you wish to be paid, you must not prevent Italy from doing so even though it will take her a long period of years."

"Italy is under the impression that the question of labor immigration has not been well understood in this country. The fact that the same law applies to every kind of immigration seems illogical. Italy feels that her regulated immigration should be treated with benevolence by the United States where so many of her sons make their homes. The rules and regulations in regard to Italian immigration to America should be a matter of mutual understanding between the federal government and the government of Italy. The social and economic benefit of such an understanding is obvious."

Discussing the re-establishment of commercial relations between Italy and Russia, the Ambassador pointed out that the country, "quite apart from any political influence or any question of recognition of the Soviet," had found it desirable to resume trade relations with Russia as a means towards a resumption of economic activities and of the supply of much needed wheat. He said that Italy had no prejudice against the recognition of the Soviet and that it would be recognized "when it is Italy's interest to do so."

"Recent expressions of opinion by the Italian parliament," the speaker declared, "have been to the effect that the government should be given full liberty of action and full power to decide if and when such recognition was to be accorded."

Italy, he added, had a monarchic parliamentary government whose operations no foreign power could control without infringing upon her political independence. "Any questioning of the legitimacy of the Italian form of government by foreign power," he said, "would be considered by Italy as hostile interference with her own affairs."

Speaking of the depreciation in Italian exchange, the ambassador said that the lire was actually worth much more than the value placed on it in foreign markets. "It is under-valuation," he said, "can only be explained on the basis of mistaken calculations, ignorance or speculation. The best evidence that the exchange on the lire is unjust consists in the fact that, while you value your dollar at twenty-two lire, then you can buy here for one dollar."

Ambassador Ricci said he did not think it "logical or just" that America should decline to have anything to do with European affairs. "It is not logical," he declared, "because if you feel that you must decline to interest yourself in his circumstances, but you are rather inclined to help him pay your debt, the shortest possible time. It is not just, because if you find that the peace treaties signed in Europe are ineffectual either on account of exaggerations or deficiencies, you must not overlook the fact that a man who spoke and acted in making them. Therefore, if you find that we have not attained a real peace you must also consider that Europe is not alone to blame for it, and that justice requires that you act with us to correct our common mistakes."

The Ambassador referred briefly to the Washington arms conference, declaring that now that naval armaments had been reduced, he was convinced that all nations eventually would curtail their land armaments. "Let us hope," he said, "that little by little we may reach our goal and that the Christian principle of human brotherhood may prevail among nations; guiding their governments to save mankind from wars even more terrible and destructive than the last one."

WHOLE FAMILY AT EVENING CLASS

How to Build.

(Toronto Globe.)

Fairbank, enjoying the distinction of being the only school in the township of York teaching evening classes in domestic science and manual training, has rolled its success and will continue it this year. With more than 100 pupils enrolled these classes are serving boys and girls who are not provided with this training in day school, and men and women are also availing themselves of the opportunity to join the classes and become superior home-makers.

Dressmaking classes are conducted on Monday and Wednesday evenings. These are attended by women with families as well as girl wage-earners. At the Fairbank Public School on Tuesday and Thursday evenings groups of girls eagerly apply themselves to the instruction given by the domestic science teacher of the day school. Many of these girls are engaged through the day in downtown offices and factories.

Only Practical Cooking. The preparation of simple, nourishing meals, which may readily be applied in the homes of the district is taught in these classes. Millinery classes are also carried on in the school on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, while arithmetic and book-keeping are taught in night classes during the week.

The manual training classes, attended by thirty boys on Monday and Thursday evenings, provide the most practical instruction to young home-builders. Fairbank is a district of home-building among the citizens, and the boys, who have jobs during the day, join these classes to learn the proper building of a roof, stairs and many phases of work that figure prominently in the erection of a working man's house.

THREE STORES

Interest is exhibited in these classes and the boys are encouraged to create in woodwork articles that will be most useful in furnishing the houses which they help "dad" build.

Decision is justified. The crowded condition of the three schools of Fairbank threatened in the spring of 1921 to do away with all manual training and domestic science classes, and a motion was passed to discontinue these classes for three years. During July a number of ratepayers petitioned for a special meeting of the school board, and on the motion of April 16 was rescinded, and it was resolved to continue not only the day school classes in domestic science and manual training, but also to resume the evening industrial classes. As a result of the later decision, the Industrial School Board—composed of the three trustees of S.S. 45 and three ratepayers—has had the satisfaction of watching the district benefit by practical training in the art of home-making.

tion to the front, and among them certain rumors of changes in the provincial act. It appeared that a very general campaign was being conducted to discredit prohibition legislation everywhere, he said, and temperance people should be on guard not only to point to weaknesses and failure, but to emphasize the gains which had been made.
