BROUGHT PRESIDENT ALL LATEST MAGAZINE READING. Washington, Oct. 9—President Wilson had occasion to read some article in a periodical known as Current Literature, and despatched a trusty messenger to get a copy.

"Get me the latest Current Literature," was the order given to the messenger, who went to comply post haste.

When he returned he was loaded down with a big bundle of all the latest magazines, selected with a literary taste that he thought went along with the mind of the chief executive.

It is understood that the president thoroughly enjoyed the joke.

EARLY HISTORY OF FIRST AUTO

Ridicule Heaped on Inventor of Forerunner of Modern Car.

Few people who ride about the country in palatial limousines or tiny runabouts are familiar with the early history of the invention which has done so much to revolutionize transportation, and which has played such an important part in the industrial development of the world today.

The interest aroused by the contest announced by the San Francisco Advertising Club held during the recent auto show in the Exposition auditorium for the display of antiquated vehicles, and for which prizes of cups were given, makes the story of the first automobile in the world of timely interest.

Steam-propelled vehicles had been devised and used to a very limited extent in England and America as early as 1830. In 1835 two New England men proposed electricity as motor power, but the problem of successful road-locomotion lagged until the middle seventies. Then appeared a genius who appreciated the possibilities of the motor vehicles at a time when his ideas were regarded as visionary.

Strange as it may seem, and with a touch of the ludicrous, the first combustion engine was operated by a combination of nitrous oxide (laughing gas) and coal-oil, mixed by an atomizing jet.

Very high power was developed in proportion of weight, but, as the explosion took place in an internal chamber, and the expanding gas had to be introduced into a cylinder proper through a valve, the heat of the explosion invariably fused this valve after a short time and stopped the engine.

The inventor then realized that to make a gas engine for highway locomotion the primary explosion must take place within the cylinder itself.

This he worked out to a point of successful operation, and by a certain rule tests determined that it developed power enough to propel his vehicle.

He met the overhauling problem by a splash system from a supply of water in the crank chamber, and solved the problem of lubrication with a mineral manufactured from petroleum.

This was in 1877. The engine alone was operated this year. The gears, wheels, clutch and steering apparatus were matters of toy-like models, of blue prints and specifications. On these he secured his patents.

Thus, the first gasoline-propelled road wagon in the world was conceived by George B. Selden, of Rochester, N. Y., in 1877, although the actual running model was not built at that time. This reason was expressed by Selden: "In that early day I was unable to interest the capital in such a crazy thing" that it must be remembered that Selden was purely an inventor. He satisfied himself that the mechanical difficulties were demonstrably solved, but did not build.

He was not a manufacturer; he was a pioneer experimenter. He first conceived the idea, which he was satisfied could be demonstrated.
