Several of the aldermen who are interested in the experiment claim that the product is only efficient as a dust preventive, but Mr. Murdoch thinks differently, and the work of laying the street is going merrily along.

Ald. Kelley, who was chiefly instrumental in having the experiment made, is not willing to father the inflated street. He claims that it is not the stuff he thought and he holds out no hope for its success as a permanent pavement.

COLORED BOXERS WHO HAVE LACKED COURAGE

England Calls Johnson a Coward—Gans Feared Punching Jackson Accused of Having Yellow Streak—Molieux Probably the Pluckiest

With no decision; Johnson left the second on a foul; the third was another no-decision affair, and the fourth was won by the present champion, Jennette, like Langford, has never been up against a top-notch white man, so we cannot tell how game he really is. The records of Langford and Jennette, classes either of them to any extent.

They are offering a $20,000 purse for Johnson and Jennette for a twenty-round bout in Paris. But Johnson won't accept, as he is not in proper condition.

Johnson keeps up his present pace Stanley Ketchel will be the heavy-weight champion of the world next fall. How the old grape juice does knock out the colored scrappers when they start to fight it good and hard.

What there ever was a negro who could scrap like a bulldog it was Joe Walcott, the Giant Killer. But when things weren't going his way, he used to be down quickly. His seconds had a hard time to keep him in the ring when he was defeated by Kid Lavigne in fifteen rounds at Massport in 1895, yet two years later he stopped Langford in twelve rounds in France.

Young Peter Jackson has done some tall scuffling, when he defeated another colored gentleman known as Professor Snowball. Young Peter was defeated by Kid Langford in the sixth in twenty. Young Peter lost the first round in fifteen rounds, also the next two each of similar length.

He won the fourth of five rounds, Langford was the victor in the fifth of fifteen rounds, and Jackson won the sixth in twenty. Young Peter lost the first round in fifteen rounds, also the next two each of similar length.

They fought a bloody contest under the old rules, and Cribb was declared the winner after thirty-three rounds. But this did not satisfy Molieux, for he had indignantly challenged Cribb to another mill.

Cribb readily accepted, and put the American fighter out in eleven rounds. After these two terrific contests both retired from the ring.

Joe Jackson in his prime was certainly a great heavy-weight, but he quit in his first battle with Bill Parham, an American, at Australia, in 1894. Jackson fought Parham again, however, some place and same year, but the police interfered in the third round.

Shortly after Jackson arrived in France in 1898 he got in a rough-and-tumble scrap with Freddy Gorman, who was only a welterweight, but after a wicked encounter Gorman made for the Australian negro cry "Enough!" Joe Goddard also made Jackson look like a quitter at Melbourne in 1899 in eight rounds. Still, Jackson was a good fighter and won some great battles within the ropes.

In 1888 George Godfrey challenged John L. Sullivan to fight for the championship, but when the "big fellow" visited Godfrey to stand up before him in a four-round bout at the Music Hall, Boston, the following evening, nothing could induce the colored pugilist to go upon the stage.

George Dixon was a good game colored lad, but I never considered him a full blooded negro. He was a fighter and was a wonderful pugilist. He defeated the champion nation and was the undisputed world's title holder.

Every follower of the fighting game knows that Joe Gans, the former light-weight champion, quit only once in a number of years, fighting off of his challengers, but in 1900 Gans quit to Frank Erne in the twelfth round of a bloody battle in New York.

He also stopped in two rounds with Terry McGovern in Chicago, but this affair was always regarded as a "frame." Gans lay down for the coin there was in it.

A negro pugilist who is much in the limelight just now is Sam Langford, of Boston, who has recently been proclaimed the heavy-weight champion of the world by Lord Lansdale and other promoters of the boxing game in England. The fact that Jack Johnson welched out of his match with Langford in London is the reason why the latter has received a belt emblematic of the title.

The National Sporting Club declared the other day that Johnson's failure to live up to his agreement was equal to forfeiting his championship. Of course this doesn't go with the fight fans here, for we can only call men champions who win their titles by battles in the ring.

Langford is a good bit lighter, but he's never been fully tried out by any game white top-notchers. He has won six of seven fights over second-raters.

Jennette, a negro, has been cutting some ice in Paris lately by beating all comers, including Sam McVey and Sandy Ferguson. But his record is not so long or so good as Langford's. He has been defeated by Jack Johnson in fifteen rounds and by Sam Langford in the same length of time.

Joe Jackson fought Langford four times. He won the first fight, Langford the second, while the third and fourth were drawn blanks.

Jennette also met Johnson in four mills. The first went three rounds

SMASHED LAMP OVER HEAD OF AN INVALID

Last evening the police were called to a house in Pond street to check the behavior of Charles Murray, a plumber, whose love for strong waters caused him to smash four lamps, smother crockery and other little things besides.

One lamp he broke over the head of an invalid who was aroused from slumber by the action and returned the blow with interest by striking the aggressor with a shovel and inflicting several cuts upon his head, which extinguished the fire of destruction in the infuriated Murray. Upon the arrival of the officers police was partly restored, but it did not prevent the officers from reporting the matter to headquarters.

The monthly meeting of the board of management of the Boys Industrial Home was held yesterday at City Hall. There was little business of an important nature transacted. The matter of the recent charges of cruelty preferred against the management by Mrs. Duddy, an ex-matron of the institution, was referred to a special committee, consisting of Ald. R. T. Hayes and W. S. Fisher. There were present at yesterday's meeting Ald. R. T. Hayes, W. S. Fisher, H. H. Mott, Jas. Myles and Judge Ritchie.
