THE CANADA BILL, AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

ADVICE TO THE CANADIANS.

WE have in our previous pages (No. 1) expressed our opinions on the causes of the present state of Canada, and on the attempt to cure one evil (Mr. Grenville's, not Pitt's bill—viz. the enactment of a £10 franchise in a feudal colony), by the infliction of another. We think the elective franchise too low, and that the effect will be (unless great care be taken) to swamp the property and intelligence of the Canadas. This is the main evil, and one that has been totally lost sight of. A democratic constitution in a colony, under a monarchical government, is the certain mode to procure separation and war. But of what use is any system of legislature, so long as the Colonial Office in Downing-street remains in its present state—impotent for all things except mischief. When the nation remains inert and blind to that absurd mode of governing vast and distant colonies, let it pay the penalty in the loss of the colonies, and the destruction of its commerce. Perhaps if a few more rebellions occurred as in Canada, and a few more millions sterling were required from the English exchequer, the present absurd and unjust colonial system (if system it can be called) would excite the public mind. Men of both parties in both Houses of Parliament, seem utterly ignorant and totally indifferent to the mode in which the colonies are governed, or pretended to be governed, at home. They are attending to an ulcer in one of the extremities, while the heart is ossifying. And this is statesmanship! One good will result from the union of the Canadas: they will become too powerful to allow a continuance of irresponsible and incapable authority in Downing-street, where it was declared to the author of the "History of the British Colonies," when the late King (Wm. IV.) urgently pressed his employment in an official capacity, that they did "not want men possessed of local and general information on the colonies!"

Another good will arise from this measure: we shall no more have men in office abetting the selfish views and encouraging the gross misstatements of persons like Mr. Warburton, for the destruction of the Canada timber trade. They will not dare to make in future a man President of the Board of Trade whose distinguishing characteristic was that he had been a Baltic merchant. No—these monstrous pro-
